POPULISM.

C. W. Wiley gives it a scorching analysis in the American Journal of Politics.

The last few years have produced a new political party in this country. It had its precursor about twenty years ago in the Greenback party. Since that time various mushroom and fungus political growths have sprung up and died away after brief and spasmodic existences. The Prohibition party can scarcely be included among the political fungi.

In 1892, for the first time, some seeming order was brought out of the chaotic elements of the various bushwhacking factions mentioned, and something like a national organization effected. The new combination was christened the People's party. Since that time it has been gradually uniting, solidifying and crystallizing, until it has almost reached the dignity of a national political organization. Formed of a heterogeneous multitude of diverse, disorganized and antagonistic elements, the mass has been melted and fused sufficiently to enable one, to some extent, to analyze and classify it. Though it lacks cohesiveness, still a rough sketch is possible. I propose, in this paper, to make such a draft in the rough as reading, listening and observation furnish. I have stood at a distance and laughed at them; have argued with, ridiculed, and denounced them; have listened to and seriously thought of them, and propose to give the result. I write of them as they appear to me. If I fail to do them justice, it is because I have mistaken or misunderstood them, and not from motives of misstatements or malice.

In the first place, it is superfluous to say that the populists are dissatisfied with present conditions, laws and tendencies, and with the acts, principles, tendencies and policies of the Democratic and Republican party—radically, utterly and irredeemably. Not only those parties themselves, but their legislation, statutes and leaders are renounced, denounced and condemned. See their preliminary address at the people at the Omaha convention. They seem utterly and hopelessly irreconciled and irreconcilable to both the old parties. Especially is such the case in regard to the Republican party. With that party there can be no affiliation or co-operation. With the Democratic party of the south and west, there are some points of similarity and agreement.

To the populist, the arch enemy of mankind is John Sherman. He is closely followed, in that regard, by Grover Cleveland and Benjamin Harrison. The sources of all evil, distress and corruption are Wall street New York, and Lombard street, London,

The Republican and Democratic leaders are the arch fiends who carry into effect the behests of those streets. All other Republicans and Democrats, the rank and file, are mere slaves and dupes of the tyrants mentioned. The selfcontained Populist has nothing but execration and wrath for the leaders, and pity and contempt for their slaves and dupes.

With their own ideas and theories, they are thoroughly infatuated. They have no doubt as to their inherent purity and correctness. Argue with them and prove by logic, history, and by their actual experiences that some or any of their vagaries are unsound, misleading, and false, and the next day or hour they are back at you with the same exploded doctrines, and unblushingly announce them as axiomatic truths. The most convincing arguments and proofs glide from them as darkness before the sun; and you are amazed to discover that you have made no impression. They will comfort you with a deluge of the most astounding statements, and if, after being convinced of their fiction and falsity, you take the pains to study the matter and to bring to them overwhelming proofs of their mistakes and misstatements, you will soon learn that your time has been utterly wasted. Your proofs will only be jeered at.

Your true Populist is a subject for psychological research and wonderment—baffling and discomforting to mental classification and analysis. By all the rules of mental science and logic, your proofs should convince and vanquish him; but they have no such effect. At the end of your most arduous efforts, if you can manage to keep him quiet long enough to ten to you, he will start in again the same old way with renewed redoubled energy.

Dissatisfied he is and disgruntled he will remain. He is bound to nurse his supposed grievances: and the more he nurses them, the more violent he becomes.

The next most prominent characteristic of the regulation populist is his violent and rapid hostility to the things that are. Everything is out of joint. After listening to his ravings, you will be surprised and grieved that one man should be, at so many points, so hostile and disaffected to the laws, institutions, and customs of his country. His opposition is not that of sorrow, meekness and resignation, but of the loud and virulent variety. A man could could not protest more vehemently if he were being robbed and despoiled by robbers and cut-throats. But it is when a number of them come together and air their sympathetic grievances that you see them at their worst. The president, congress, legislatures, railroads, corporations, bankers, and business men are denounced and defamed in terms that make the listener blush for his race and humanity.

The unthinking, ignorant man falls an easy prey to these agitators. No matter how peacefully and contentedly he may have lived in this country year after year, these chronic grumblers will find a grievance for him and prove it by their own peculiar tracts and arguments. He listens and discovers that he has been wronged, although he did not know it. They soon convince him that his wrongs are legion and monstrous. He becomes dissatisfied and unhappy, and rails at his country and its laws to the satisfaction of his instructors. The common and inevitable dupe for conversion to the new faith is the victim of hard times or other misfortune. He becomes a sure prey, at first, and then an ardent advocate of the new faith. The milk of human kindness turns to gall and wormwood, and the laws of his country become the causes of his misfortune.

On every street corner you will find the wordy advocates and walking delegates of the new faith, finding fault with everything and everybody, waiting and watching for an opportunity to proselyte and convert new disciples to the cause. Their zeal, energy, and ingenuity are marvelous, and one cannot help but wish that the same could be expended to a useful and laudable purpose. In this respect, they much resemble the early Christians when trying to convert a world. Difficulties seem to please them; no effort is spared; time is not taken into account; and business is neglected.

Whatever calamity or misfortune afflicts the people is used as a basis for adding new recruits. A failure of crops is welcomed as an aid to the cause. A strike, a lockout, a fall in wages, or depression in business, is used as a happy instrument to promote their interests and add to their numbers.

The Coxeyite lunacy was to them a harvest and convincing proof o all they had maintained. The coal miner's strike, the Pullman boycott and attendant lawlessness seemed to them natural consequences of corporate cupidity and spoliation. They prophesied and many hoped that it was the beginning of a revolution. Frequent mention was made by many of the similarity of conditions existing in this country to those preceding the French revolution. The action of courts and the military arm of the government in suppressing violence and compelling respect for law and order, was strongly denounced by them as unlawful and outrageous. The Populists were back of these troubles, encouraging and urging them on; and as a result of such countenance and support, they expect and count on a large accession to their numbers. In fine, lawlessness and suffering seem pleasing to them; while they would look on business revival and peace and contentment as calamitous.

The main accomplishment of the Populist is his knowledge of finance and political economy. There is where he "shines." What he does not know about finance and the financial management of this great nation is not worth knowing. The greatest minds of this and every nation have been devoted to solving the perplexing and knotty questions of national financial management. Many have made it a study of their lives. But the average Populist, however unlettered and untutored, will solve the most vexatious problems therein with a readiness, ease, and glibness that will astound one. He will point out all the errors that have existed from Alexander Hamilton to John G. Carlisle, and suggest improvements and corrections. Though he cannot successfully manage a small blacksmith shop, a peanut stand, a grocery store, or a forty acre farm, and will become hopelessly entangled therein, yet he will unravel the knottiest of national or international financial tangles with ease; and become exceedingly vexed and angry at any one who doubts his solution or questions its absolute correctness. He knows all the details and minutiæ intuitively.

To the writer it was for a long time a puzzle where each and every member of this party gleaned their astounding and unheard statistics and minutiæ of detail. After a series of volumes of Populistic literature became known to him his wonder ceased. These works should be mentioned. By writers mostly unknown to fame, a number of volumes have been unloaded upon the public, at cheap prices, which the average Populist reads, quotes, and believes in with the implicit faith of the Puritan in his bible. He does not question their astounding statements or doubt in their truth and correctness. This Populistic literature is a marvel and a revelation to the uninitiated. In it men are vilified who deserve naught but praise. Men are praised who merit only contempt. Speeches and writings are so distorted, misinterpreted, and misrepresented that their authors would stand aghast at the uses made of them and the thoughts attributed to them. Such personages as Lincoln, Grant, Thad Stevens, Sumner, Garfield, Blaine, John Sherman, and others are made to father thoughts and sentiments they never heard or harbored; ideas so out of place, so unthought of, that they would never recognize their alleged authorship. All these are so interwoven, detached, changed, misinterpreted, and misrepresented, in such an interminable tangle, as totally to distort them from their original meaning and intent. After reading a few of these volumes, no one need wonder at the crack-brained ideas of the average Populist. For the most part, they are a travesty on political economy and logic, and an outrage on facts and common sense.

Let some one spring a new theory of socialistic life, and the Populists at once adopt it. They do not inquire into its absurdities, or analyze its statements to sift out fact from fiction, or logic from unreason, but immediately repeat the statements as absolute verity. They never think of doubting the correctness of the ideas expressed in the works of Bellamy, Henry George, Ignatius Donnelly and other of their authors, any more than does the student doubt the correctness of his arithmetic. Reason with them you cannot. To them their favorite authors are faultless and incapable of error.

If you dispute or ridicule their literature, you at once become in their eyes the agent or dupe of incorporate wealth. However poor or honest you may be, they will not spare you. To disbelieve in their doctrines is treason to the "down-trodden millions," and you are denounced as a "minion of Wall street."

Throughout the west, the Populists have added largely to their numbers by advocating the cause of free coinage of silver. By making this their main issue and keeping quiet on their numerous lunatic theories, they have received a much larger support than they otherwise would. Should they throw off their silver mask and openly espouse their socialistic and communistic doctrines, a large part of their numbers in that section would soon fall away. At present, "hard times" and business depression is their main support. When business assumes its normal aspect and prosperity again brightens the land, the voters will fall away from them like leaves from trees after autumnal frosts.

The rank and file of the party are mostly well-meaning, misled men, suffering under business depression, ready to grasp at any new thing that holds out a promise of betterment. False theories and teachings are their bane. Prosperity and sound doctrines will heal their disaffection. But back of these men is something more, something worse, something deadly. Urging on dissatisfaction, lawlessness and violence are a lot of cowardly skulkers, filled with mischief, disloyalty and treason to the laws and customs of their country—men who have no respect for law or human rights; men who should feel the weight of law and justice; followers of Spies, Parsons and Ling; men who take advantage of misery and distress to foment violence and lawlessness. These pernicious traitors to the laws and institutions of America prophecy revolution and blood-shed because they hope for such. They are now seeking to direct and control the new party. They seek first to make the people dissatisfied, then to disregard law and the authorities, then to come out in open violence and treason.

For this purpose they condemn both the old parties, claiming that congress, legislatures and courts are corrupt and that all laws are made and enforced in the interest of evil and against the welfare of the poor and honest. They seek first to undermine, then to overthrow.

Any close observer of Populist doctrines, speeches and literature, cannot fail to discover these instigators of evil working in and through the new party and striving to create trouble. By falsehood and slander they have already made their members dissatisfied. They have made them believe that present governmental powers and agencies are thoroughly corrupt and hostile to the common people. They have already caused them to look upon courts and military with suspicion and hostility. They have encouraged and sympathized with lawless outbreaks against authority.

Debs and his strike on the railways, McBride and his striking coal miners, Coxey and organized vagrancy, Waite and the Cripple Creek strikers, were all backed by the Populists, and attendant lawlessness and violence encouraged and approved. The party must soon call a halt to these treasonable indications within its ranks or inevitable overthrow and disgrace soon await it. Such things cannot long continue. If its advocates hope to form a great party, fitted to take charge of the great and complex interests of this country and administer them for the benefit of the common people, they must sternly repress all indications of turbulence and lawlessness. One rebellion in this country has been enough for a good many years to come; and the hare-brained schemers and poisonous workers of evil, who seek to overturn law by violence, will be put down with promptness and dispatch.

I do not wish to be understood as saying that anarchy is a principle of the People's party. But I do wish to say that it is or will be the result of present Populist teachings. The tendency is rapidly in that direction. The party must weed out the mischief-makers. The socialists, communists and anarchists have already chosen that party for a home and harbor, and are using it to work out their designs, and as a means to disseminate their pernicious doctrines. The tone of many of the party, under these sinister influences, is fast becoming more violent and destructive. During the late labor troubles many of the party were outspoken advocates of blood and revolution. They were really hanging over the precipice of treason. With present tendencies, I do not hesitate to say that it is very doubtful if one can be a full member of that party and a good citizen, at the same time. Should the sober, second thought of the many honest and patriotic men of the party succeed in controlling the advocates of evil in their ranks and spew out the fanged adders that have affiliated with them, there are some hopes of the party's becoming a great national organization. But if such be not done and done soon, the party is doomed. A few more Waites, Lewellings, Pennoyers, Debs and Sovereigns, placed in power and authority, and the party will be hopelessly ground to powder by public opinion at the ballot box. Such mischief makers should be relegated to the rear and to oblivion. Their control and leadership can only mean party ruin. The states now afflicted with their lawless rule are groaning with their burdens. Business is appalled with fear. Money refuses to go into their domains until purged of their follies. Respectable laborers and business men are ashamed and humiliated.

The worst feature of the party is its lack of level-headed leaders. If there are any such, they have failed to make themselves manifest. The party has been, up to date, the constant prey of violent demagogues and discredited politicians from the older parties. No party that is officered by conscienceless agitators and political mountebanks, can hope to gain the confidence of the great American people. There is scarcely an ill wisher of this country to-day to be found outside of the folds of the Populist party. It is an omen of the tendencies of that organization. The ultimate end of the party, with present sentiments and leadership, can only be extinction and disgrace. As soon as good times reappear and business revives, the party will die away. It was the product of distress and dissatisfaction, and when they cease the party will go with them. Some of their principles will, doubtless, survive and be incorporated in a party that may have influence and standing in the nation. But that party will have to be under the control of wise leadership and intelligent patriotism. Parties of violence, discord and lawlessness cannot endure. The Populist party has already gone so far in that direction that it will be almost a hopeless task to save it from destruction. So, as a party, I prophecy for it a speedy dissolution. Its short life has been unique and unsavory. Its hasty dissolution in death will be gladly welcomed by every lover of his country.

County Division.

The great division meeting that you have heard so much about did not pan out such a big thing after all. A few malcontents gathered themselves together and engaged in a season of resolving, but for all practical purposes they might better have been at home. It is plain that Polk county will not be divided until the proper time arrives for a division upon the basis of two counties, on a north and south line—and that time is not yet.

Death of Mrs. Chas. Rapp.

The sad news of the death of Mrs. Chas. G. Rapp, reached this city on Saturday. Mrs. Rapp had been suffering from consumption for months, had been to St. Paul for treatment, spent sometime also in this city under a doctor's care but finally returned to her home at St. Hilaire, where she died about 4 oclock on Saturday morning. Mr. and Mrs. Rapp have been residents of St. Hilaire for several years and have made many friends while living there. They have also many friends in this city who will deeply sympathize with the husband in his irreparable loss.

Hall's Vegetable Sicilian Hair Renewer is, unquestionably, the best preservative of the hair. It is also curative of dandruff, tetter and scalp affections.

More Room Needed.

Prof. John Moore went down to St. Paul last week to attend the state teacher's meeting. On his way back he encountered a JOURNAL reporter, and among other things of interest, educationally, Mr. Moore said in substance: "One of the greatest needs of our city schools to-day is more room. Every room we have is so crowded that it is utterly impossible for our teachers to accomplish the best results with their pupils, and every term I am compelled to turn away a great many who reside outside the district, simply because we have not room enough to accommodate all of those who live within its limits and whom, of course, we are obliged to provide for. We ought to have a school similar to the Strawbridge college in connection with our schools. An institution of that kind would pay for its maintainance from outside patronage, and more. The city stands in its own light just as long as it fails to provide for such things.

Do you know that perfect health and prime condition depends upon the proper assimilation of the food that you take to sustain life and strength and the prompt and natural discharge of the waste. You must keep the sewers open. Keep the liver and kidneys in a healthy state. There is no better remedy made for this important service than Haller's Sarsaparilla and Burdock and F. L. Kermott is authorized to refund money for every bottle failing to give satisfaction.

All children are liable to attacks of croup, and while all mothers have a dread of this disease, how often does it happen that they are aroused from their sleep by the croupy cough of a child, and find themselves with nothing at hand to protect and maybe save the life of their little one. It is not expensive to have a bottle of Haller's Sure Cure Cough Syrup in the house. Give it freely. Hoarseness disappears. Phlegm in the throat is loosened and your worry ceases. Sold and guaranteed by F. L. Kermott.

Horrors of the Delavan House Fire at Albany Hourly Increasing.

Only One Narrow Exit.

About 20 girls were sleeping in the attic, which was on the Steuben street side of the house, and the only exit was a narrow stairway leading to the third floor hallway, from which there were three stairways by which to escape. The most reliable information that could be obtained was given by an employe of the house named Kate Monahan, who knew all the girls well and had, up to that time, been unable to find 12 of them, whom she is positive are dead. Besides these she asserts that four men are also in the ruins. Miss Monahan says she escaped through the basement and that at that time the girls, she believes, were lost in the attic. When she reached the last stairway the six lower steps were burned and she had to jump the remaining distance. If the girls were in the attic then it seems impossible for them to have escaped,

BURNED TO DEATH.

Mother and Five Children Perish at El Paso, Wis.

ELLSWORTH, Wis., Jan. 1.—Sunday morning at an early hour Mrs. Michael O'Connell and five children were burned to death in their home in the town of El Paso. Mr. O'Connell was the only member of the family who slept down stairs, and he barely escaped from the building in his night clothes. As he rushed out his wife appeared at an upper window and dropped the youngest child in his arms, and, returning into the room was undoubtedly suffocated, for she never returned. Mr. O'Connell was perhaps fatally burned in his attempts to save his family.

Mr. O'Connell cannot tell much about the fire or how it originated. He was awakened by a choking sensation, and jumping out of bed he found the room full of smoke. He ran to the kitchen door and opened it.

The Flames Burst Through

on him and in such force as to knock him down. How he got on his feet or out of the building he is unable to tell. When he did get out of the building he heard one of the children crying. He said he was awakened by the heat and smoke and ran to the window and jumped out. The mother was also awakened, and catching up her youngest child, a boy 2 years old, ran to the window and threw him to her husband below. She turned and went back to arouse the rest of the children, five in number, who were still sleeping. Before she succeeded in arousing them or getting them to the window the floor fell in, burying the mother and the five remaining children in the roaring fire beneath and all around them.

EXCELSIOR VISITED.

Block of Business Buildings in a Minnesota Village Wiped Out.

MINNEAPOLIS, Jan. 1.—The business portion of Excelsior, on the shore of Lake Minnetonka, was almost wiped out at an early hour. There was a strong wind blowing toward the lake, and it seemed as if the entire town would be blotted out. The flames spread on all sides, and a message was sent to Minneapolis for aid.

The fire continued with unabated vigor until the entire one side of Main street, one block, had been wiped out.

The loss is a serious one to the merchants. It is estimated that it will run up to $30,000, and that the insurance will not cover half that sum.

Coal Barge Lost at Sea.

PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 1.—The coal barge Venus, with a crew of five men and a cargo of 4,000 tons of coal, is supposed to have foundered at sea during the gale of Dec. 26 with all hands.

Hotel and Stores Burn.

KULM, N. D., Jan. 1.—Fire destroyed Mix's hotel, Lang's general store and two other buildings, one of the latter a saloon, in which the fire originated.

BOND ISSUES CEASE.

CARLISLE SAYS THERE MUST BE FINANCIAL LEGISLATION.

No More Bonds Will Be Issued, Even to Avert a Panic—Little Likelihood That Congress Will Yield to His Expressed Wishes.

ST. PAUL, Dec. 28.—The Washington correspondent of The Dispatch telegraphs his paper as follows regarding financial legislation:

Immediately after congress convenes next month there is to be a decided, if not a desperate move all along the administration lines to pass the Carlisle substitute currency bill. During the holiday interim steering committees from both house and senate have been named, but whether all of those who have been chosen will consent to not remains to be learned after the return of members from the holiday festivities at home.

Something Must Be Done.

Secretary Carlisle is determined that there must be some financial legislation looking to the retirement of the large volume of treasury notes, that are now being used to whittle down the gold reserve at the behest and dictation of the money trust. Carlisle is reported to have said at the last meeting of the cabinet, that he would not issue another lot of bonds even to avert a panic. While the exact words of the secretary are not here given he is known to have said something like this:

Will Not Issue More Bonds.

"Unless congress enacts some legislation to relieve the treasury department, I shall let the country take the consequences. Another issue of bonds during this administration is what the Republicans have predicted, and just what they want. We have control of congress until the 4th of March. And we are directly responsible to the people. I have urged, argued and pleaded with congress to authorize a popular loan with low interest bearing bonds of small denominations. Can the Democratic party jeopardize its future for many years by allowing this session to adjourn without having enacted legislation that will at least restore the business of the country to a feeling of confidence in the ability of the government to establish a safe currency system and meet its obligations."

But notwithstanding these plain words from the secretary of the treasury, there is every reason to believe that the session will close without any financial legislation being enacted. There is strong opposition to the Carlisle plan in both houses. The party lash will be efficacious enough to get the bill through the house, but it will land among shoals and breakers in the senate sea.

With only two months left for the garrulous Stewart, Allen, Peffer and Kyle, there is no hope for anything this side of the grave of the Fifty-third congress. The Populist talkers who want to see $1,000,000,000 issued at once by the general government, will find it an easy work talking the Carlisle bill to its death, as swearing off at New Year. The prospects are that no financial legislation will run the senate gauntlet this season.

SATOLLI SAID THIS.

The Apostolic Delegate Makes a Brief Statement Regarding Secret Societies.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 1.—Owing to misapprehensions caused by the publication of statement that the decree concerning secret societies was not final, and was submitted to bishops in order to secure from them opinions thereon, Mgr. Satolli authorizes the Associated Press to make the following brief statement of facts to set at rest misapprehensions and possible misrepresentation:

The archbishops of the United States have taken council with respect to three societies, namely, the Odd Fellows, the Sons of Temperance and the Knights of Pythias. The archbishops decided that the whole question should be submitted to the apostolic see. In a communication from his eminence, Cardinal Monaco, to Mgr. Satolli, the action of the general congregation of cardinals to whom his holiness committed the question is made known. The congregation, after carefully considering the matter, made a decree. This decree his holiness fully confirmed, and gave it complete effect. The decree is, therefore, transmitted to all archbishops, bishops, and other ordinaries of the United States, to be by them carried into effect. Mgr. Satolli has acted merely as a medium of transmission. But in view of contradictory and confusing reports emanating from various parts of the country, the facts are thus briefly stated.

First Earth Turned.

SHEBOYGAN, Wis., Dec. 28.—Work has been commenced on the Sheboygan, St. Paul and Central railroad. The first shovel of dirt was turned by Mayor Geelo. Speeches were made by leading citizens. The road will connect this city with the Chicago-St. Paul railroad and will be completed by July 1, next. Parties interested in this road are also connected with the Superior and Southeastern and it is now thought that road will also be constructed.

Saved the Sutro Baths.

SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 26.—The Cliff House was destroyed by fire at 9:30 p. m. The Sutro baths, adjoining, were saved. The monetary loss will not exceed $20,000.

Susan Fenimore Cooper Dead.

COOPERSTOWN, N. Y., Jan. 1.—Miss Susan Fenimore Cooper, daughter of James Fenimore Cooper, died of apoplexy in her 82nd year.

Gear Is Improving.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 27.—Representative Gear of Iowa, who was taken suddenly ill Monday night, is reported by his family to be considerably improved.

AWFUL HOLOCAUST.

SOMEONE TIPPED OVER A KEROSENE LAMP

During a Christmas Entertainment at Silver Lake, Or., and in the Excitement That Followed Forty-one Persons Were Either Trampled or Burned to Death.

KALAMATH FALLS, Or., Dec. 29.—News has just reached here that a most horrible holocaust occurred at Silver Lake, Lake county, Or., on Christmas eve, in which 41 persons were burned to death and 16 badly injured, 5 of whom will die. A large crowd had assembled in Chrisman Bros.' hall to attend a Christmas tree festival. While the festivities were at their height someone climbed on a bench, from which point he expected to get a better view of what was going on. In doing so his head struck a lamp hanging from the ceiling, overturning it. the oil immediately caught fire, and, everything in the room being dry and of an imflammable nature, the room

Soon Was a Mass of Flames.

Some one shouted: "Shut the door and keep quiet; it can be put out." By this time the confusion was so great that people began scrambling in a wild endeavor to reach the door. Women and children were trampled under foot, and, as there was only one exit to the hall and the fire being between the majority of the crowd and the door, many rushed headlong into the flames.

The news was brought here by stage from Silver Lake. Only meagre particulars were sent, as the little town is frenzy of excitement and grief.

DELAVAN HOUSE DESTROYED.

New York's Famous Political Headquarters Burned to the Ground.

ALBANY, N. Y., Dec. 31.—The Delavan House, famous as political headquarters for the past 40 years, has been totally destroyed by fire. Several persons were fatally injured by jumping from windows.

FIRE CHIEF KILLED.

John J. Breslin and J. J. Rooney Killed by a Falling Wall.

NEW YORK, Dec. 31.—Batallion Fire Chief John Breslin, and Fireman John L. JAMES G. FAIR DEAD.

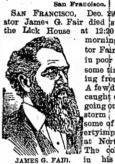
California's Ex-Senator Dies Suddenly at San Francisco.



JAMES G. FAIR.

SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 29.—Ex-Senator James G. Fair died suddenly at the Lick House at 12:30 Saturday morning. Senator Fair had been in poor health for some time, suffering from asthma. A few days ago he caught cold while going out in a rain storm to view some of his property improvements at North Beach. The cold settled in his kidneys. Friday evening he was feeling better than for the past few days and his death was entirely unexpected. Senator Fair was about 64 years old. His death was due to a complication of kidney and stomach troubles. His only son, Charles G. Fair, whom he disinherited about a year ago, was with his father at the time of his death, a reconciliation having been effected a short time ago.

Senator Fair was born in Ireland, and was United States senator from Nevada. He made his fortune in the Comstock lode, and was a member of the famous bonanza firm of Flood, Mackay, Fair & O'Brien. He largely increased his wealth by investments in San Francisco and California real estate, and his fortune is estimated at $20,000,000.

NEBRASKA DESTITUTION.

Relief Committee Unable to Relieve All Demands for Aid.

DENVER, Dec. 31.—The Rocky Mountain News has received special dispatches from Western Nebraska telling of the destitution and distress prevailing among the inhabitants of the drought-stricken districts. A dispatch from Hastings says: Terrible destitution exists in Perkins, Chase, Dundy, Lincoln, Haye, Hitchcock and the frontier counties, and the worst feature is the people in several localities are afflicted with scurvy for want of wholesome food. The state relief committee finds themselves unable to relieve all the people in distress, so great are the demands for aid. Hundreds of families are without coal and in the border counties where no trees or brush exist the poor people had a hard time to keep from freezing to death. In Perkins county destitution is complete. Over 600 families are appealing for help.

EXECUTION OF TWO STICKS.

He Died Protesting His Innocence and Singing the Death Song.

DEADWOOD, S. D., Dec. 29.—The Indian, Two Sticks, was hanged Friday morning, protesting his innocence until the last. At 10:05 the death warrant was read to him by United States Marshal Peemiller, after which he made a speech, in which he said: "I am innocent. My heart is not bad and never has been. There are lots of good white men around here and there is nothing the matter with me. God is good, and if a man tell a lie he drops dead that minute. I can hold up both hands and say I was not at the cabin that night. The four boys did the killing. I am not afraid to die and am ready to die."

BYRNES IS OUT.

Resigns His Position as Superintendent of the New York Police Department.

NEW YORK, Dec. 31.—At 8:50 Saturday night the Lexow committee adjourned, subject to the call of the chair, thus closing a session of investigation which was brim full of startling revelations. Just as he was through answering Mr. Goff's probing questions Superintendent Byrnes handed a letter to Chairman Lexow and said that it was a copy of one that he had sent to Mayor-elect Strong early this month. It was his resignation from the force, of which he has been a member for the last 32 years. The superintendent said that on two occasions since he was appointed in Superintendent Murray's place he was on the point of resigning, owing to the continued conflict between the commissioners and himself. The superintendent, he said, should have absolute charge of the department, but that all his efforts in that direction were frustrated by the commissioners. The department was honeycombed with abuses, which had been growing for 30 years and they could only be remedied by radical legislation. Local politicians, he claimed, were the curse of the department, and as long as politics was a factor in the force such a state of things would exist.

ACCUSED COMSTOCK.

Serious Charges Made Before the Lexow Committee—Comstock Denies.

NEW YORK, Dec. 28.—During the Lexow investigation a green goods man named Streep testified that he had given Anthony Comstock $1,000 to have an indictment against him quashed, Comstock, when asked about it, vehemently denied ever receiving money for such a purpose.

Florida's Fruit Crop Damaged to the Extent of Millions.

JACKSONVILLE, Fla., Jan. 1.—The first reports of Florida's loss in citrus fruits from the extraordinary cold snap that visited this section several days ago were not exaggerated. The best estimates set the loss on oranges alone at $5,000,000, without counting young orange trees killed, and the general destruction of pineapples, limes, guavas and bananas and winter vegetables, which must make heavy additional losses.

WINTER SUGGESTIONS.

How to Keep Hens Healthy and Laying Eggs.

First of all, the fact of regularity in feeding must be established. It not only means better health and larger profits, but also reduced cost; hence it is to be placed at the head as of great consequence. Begin by feeding at regular hours, and let the practice extend over all the stock.

Feed the morning meal at daylight. The hens fed at 3 to 4 in the afternoon and going to roost immediately will be hungry by 6 the next morning and ready for breakfast. If this be delayed, the system will suffer and the forces which would go to the building of eggs be diverted to supply heat to the system. Let the morning meal be of cooked food, something easily digested, and this should be fed warm to raise at once the temperature of the body, the quantity being only enough to supply the demands, satisfy the hungry cry and send the hens to their work singing all the while. An abundant breakfast means a dull stupid flock for half a day at least. Activity is the secret of good health and the underlying principle of egg production. To insure this the morning ration should be of cooked food, fed warm, moderately dry and not enough to satisfy the hens. Let the noon ration, if any be fed, be entirely of vegetables, a few chopped onions or a cabbage hung in the pene just high enough to oblige the hens to jump to peck it. About 3 p. m. feed the whole grain, oats, wheat and in the very coldest weather a little corn. At present prices feed wheat, but be sparing of the quantity. One quart for 15 to 17 hens is sufficient, and this should be so scattered and buried that only a kernel at a time will be found. Clean pens, fresh water, pure air and a system of feeding such as is here outlined will bring money to the owner every month of the winter.

PHILOSOPHY AND HENS.

Bantams Are Like Japs, and Shanghais Are Like Swedes.

"Have you ever thought how closely fowls resemble people? No? Well, I always think of a Swede when I see one of my Shanghai roosters stalk past. The Cochin Chinas, low set and broad in the beam, suggest Suabians. The Plymouth Rock reminds me of a Plattdeutscher, and the bantam, with its bright eye and glossy plumage, is like the Jap in more ways than one.

"But, say, I find the barnyard flock a mighty faithful picture of modern society. The old dowager hens are the social censors, and any flyabout, skittish young pullets that try to head the procession are vigorously chaperoned into the background by the old uns. You often see a passel of dignified, middle aged fowls enjoying a 5 o'clock dust bath in the garden and gossiping away over family secrets.

"There is the emancipated hen with spurs, who can whip her weight in game cocks. There is the hen in knickerbockers, who tries to crow and gets cackled down and guyed to death by the half grown broilers. There is the hen that gets set in her ways and incubates herself thin over a pair of glass nest eggs, despite all the arguments of her friends. There is the bargain counter hen. My wife always finds her on the skirmish line when she shakes out the tablecloth. There is the timid hen, who jumps with alarm every time a grasshopper leaps from under her feet. There is the foolish, gadding hen, who is always getting in front of road wagons or sitting on the comb of the stable roof, cackling about nothing. Oh, I tell you, there's hens and hens!"—A Philosopher.

A Fowl's Stomach.

Fowls swallow their food, broken or not, and it enters the crop or first stomach and remains in it until it has become softened, more or less. When a small quantity at a time, just as grain runs into a grist mill, it is forced into the gizzard among the grit. The gizzard is a strong, muscular stomach, and it is at work night and day, when there is a grist to grind, similar to bellows, contracting and expanding, and thus forcing the grit into the grain and triturating the whole mass, after which it is in a suitable condition to be quickly digested.

Forced Molting.

I am somewhat interested in chickens and winter eggs, says a farmer, but have bad trouble in getting my hens feathered and laying before winter. I tried an experiment this season which, I believe, will assist winter egg production. I plucked the greater portion of their feathers about July 1. The result is that those so treated were feathered perfectly Nov. 1 and laying eggs. My reason for this is to grow feathers while the weather is hot and eggs cheap.

Poultry Notes.

Strong, stimulating food has a tendency to disorganize the stomach and produce indigestion.

Better results can be obtained by giving a warm feed in the morning and warm water to drink.

Gather the eggs in winter as soon as possible after they are laid to prevent them from getting frozen.

Milk in any form is both meat and drink for laying hens, as it contains constituents of the white or albumen of eggs.

Poor land is well adapted to the poultry business.

A little linseed (oilcake) meal—say a tablespoonful to each adult bird three times a week—will help to add gloss to the plumage.

Irregular feeding is thought to be the cause of many disorders among fowls.

Poultry raising is on the increase as farmers get better acquainted with the industry.

A western poultryman says that there is nothing that will bring eggs like steamed cut hay and granulated fresh bone.

An Indian Story.

Especially if it be a good one and full of useful information is always interesting.

I have a book beautifully illustrated, that tells much about the Indians and the northwest, and the miraculous escape of one man from them in the early days.

It tells also of the Yellowstone Park, the greatest wonder of the natural world.

For only 6 cents in stamps and your address, I will send you the book.

My Wife is Nervous

Says many a man and too often he is inclined to blame the poor, tired woman who cannot eat or sleep, whose whole life is filled with misery because her blood has become impoverished and her nervous system exhausted. She needs a building up medicine like Hood's Sarsaparilla. A few bottles will enrich and vitalize her blood, tone and strengthen her digestive organs, give her a good appetite, enable her to sleep soundly, banish her nervousness and bring back her smiles. Mr. J. W. Roberson, of Greenfield, Tenn., says: "My wife began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla about three months ago and she is now taking her third bottle. She has been in poor health for fifteen years. Hood's Sarsaparilla is doing her more good than any other medicine she has ever taken. Her appetite is better, she looks better and there has been improvement in every way."

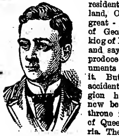
AN AMERICAN PRINCE.

James L. Ord, Telegraph Lineman, Claims Descent From George IV.



JAMES L. ORD.

James L. Ord, a lineman of the Western Union Telegraph company and a resident of Portland, Or., is a great-grandson of George IV, king of England, and says he can produce the documents to prove it. But for an accident of religion he might now be on the throne in place of Queen Victoria. The story of his connection with the English throne is an interesting one. History shows that prior to 1785 the Prince of Wales, who afterward became George IV, was desperately in love with Maria Fitzherbert, a young widow of wealth, beauty and good family. The prince was 19, and she was 25. Mrs. Fitzherbert frowned upon his suit, well knowing that it would not end happily for the young prince and herself. The prince vowed he would kill himself if she refused to marry him and even went so far as to gash himself with a knife. The result was that the tender hearted widow married him privately in 1785. As she was a Catholic the ceremony was performed by a priest and was not legal in England at the time.

The result of this union was a son, who was placed in charge of one James Ord, who called him his nephew and took him to America. The alleged nephew was named James Ord, and although he joined the continental army he afterward received numerous gifts from his mother in England and was watched by British agents until he died in Omaha at the age of 95. Of his seven children, the youngest male living is John B. Ord of Santa Cruz, Cal., whose second son is James L. Ord, the Western Union lineman. When James Ord, the alleged uncle, died, he left papers showing that his so called nephew was the son of George IV and Maria Fitzherbert. After his marriage to Mrs. Fitzherbert Prince George married Princess Caroline. After her death Mrs. Fitzherbert again lived with George, who was then king, but at length retired to Brighton, where she died in 1837. It is said that documents proving "James Ord's" legitimacy are now locked up in Coutts' bank in London.

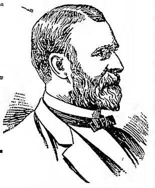
The Western Union prince is 24 years old and a blood, smooth faced, graceful young man. He seems possessed of unusual intelligence for one following the calling of a telegraph lineman, and he believes that one day the papers in Coutts' bank will be opened. He does not believe, however, that he will ever assist in running the British government.

HE SENTENCED DEBS.

Career of Judge Woods at the Bar and on the Bench.

Judge William A. Woods, whose trial and sentence of Eugene V. Debs and his lieutenants in the great strike of the American Railway union have again brought him prominently before the public, has served about three years as United States judge for the Seventh judicial circuit, embracing Indiana, Illinois and Wisconsin, and has had many years' experience on the bench. There was great opposition to his confirmation in the senate at the time of his appointment, but he pulled through by a vote of 25 to 24.

Judge Woods is a native of middle Tennessee, having been born in Marshall county on May 16, 1837. When he was still quite young, his parents removed to Davis county, Ia., and a few years later to Indiana. Young Woods left home at the age of 12 to seek his fortune. His first employment was driving oxen in a sawmill. After assisting to build an academy at Troy, Ia., by carrying bricks and mortar he entered it as a pupil and in time became one of the teachers. He graduated from Wabash college and begun the practice of law in Grant county and afterward in Goshen, Elkhart county.



JUDGE WILLIAM A. WOODS.

In 1866 he served as a member of the lower house of the legislature and in 1873 was elected judge of the Thirty-fourth judicial district, being re-elected in 1876 without opposition. In 1880 he was nominated and elected judge of the Indiana supreme court. In May, 1883, he was appointed United States district judge for the district of Indiana as successor to Walter Q. Gresham, who had entered the cabinet of President Arthur as postmaster general.

Judge Woods was appointed to his present position by President Harrison in December, 1891, and was confirmed March 17, 1892.

To Dam Historic Avon.

It is proposed to make the port of Bristol, England, accessible to transatlantic vessels at all times by damming the river Avon at its mouth and using locks. According to the plans of the engineers, a constant depth of 32 feet can be obtained and the necessary docks and breakwaters built for $11,000,000.

HEROES OF THE SURF

SOME OF THEIR DEEDS RELATED IN A SOUVENIR VOLUME.

Heroic Death of the Men of "Peaked Hill Bar" Station—A Gallant Rescue on Lake Ontario—Volunteer Member of the Service on the South Carolina Coast.

From a souvenir volume prepared to sell for the benefit fund of the life saving service the New York Herald makes extracts.

While no effort has been made to fill the volume with narratives of the life savers' heroic exploits, the book contains several stories simply told which are interesting and may well be quoted as illustrations of the self sacrificing heroism of these coast guardians.

One of the most touching is the narrative of the death of Keeper Atkins and Surfmen Taylor and Mayo of the Peaked Hill Bar station:

"On the morning of Nov. 30, 1890, the sloop Trumbull was discovered by the patrol on the inner bar. The lifeboat was quickly manned by Keeper Atkins and Surfmen Taylor, Mayo, Kelly, Young and Fisher and rowed to the helpless craft. The crew, excepting two, who positively refused assistance and remained on board the vessel, were safely landed on shore.

"The gale continued to increase in fury. The sea was running high, and Keeper Atkins, realizing the danger that threatened those who had refused assistance, again started out with his brave band to save them from what seemed certain death.

"The darkness was intense, and in their attempt to get nearer the sloop the lifeboat was caught by a swinging boom and capsized. The same sea that caused this calamity struck the vessel, and she floated from the bar and sailed away. The surfmen clung for awhile to their overturned boat, but finally attempted to swim to the shore as their only chance for life. Surfmen Young, Kelly and Fisher, apparently more dead than alive, were rescued by Surfman Cole, who had remained on the beach, and they were cared for by him, while one of the sloop's crew was sent to the town for medical aid.

"The remainder of the capsized boat's crew, including Keeper Atkins and Surfmen Taylor and Mayo, though excellent swimmers, were fighting for life against fearful odds. Their dying cries, mingling with the shrieking winds, were soon silenced, and they were swept by the waves beyond the reach of help and swallowed by the angry sea.

"Eager, watchful ones patrolled the shore, hoping, praying that though dead their comrades' bodies might be recovered. After many weary hours of watching, as if to make amends for its cruel work, old ocean gave back each lifeless form and laid it gently on the frozen beach. The whole village turned out to do these brave men honor, and when they were carried from the church to their last resting places few eyes were dry. Small mounds of earth and marble slabs now mark the places where they sleep."

There are many appliances auxiliary to the principal means employed in the operations of the service. The life saving dress, which has been made familiar to the public through the exploits of Paul Boyton, has been used with great advantage. At the stranding of a schooner in the night on Lake Ontario last year in a sea which would not admit of the use of the boat a shot line was fired over her with the intention of setting up the lines for the use of the breeches buoy. The sailors hauled the whip line on board, and when the tally board, on which the directions for the method of procedure are printed in English on one side and in French on the other, was received the captain attempted by the light of a lantern to read them. Pulling over them for some time, he at length contemptuously threw the board down on the deck, finding it impossible to make anything of it, having seen only the French side. Not knowing what else to do, therefore, he simply made the line fast, but in such a manner that it could not be worked from the shore. The surfmen vainly endeavored to convey the instruction by signs.

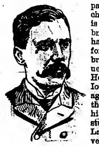
In the meantime the destruction of the vessel and the loss of all board seemed imminent. In this dilemma one of the surfmen put on the life saving dress, and after a gallant struggle succeeded in hauling himself along the line through the breakers to the vessel, where he remained and took charge of the operations until all were safely landed.

Here is a bright little extract which, as the souvenir volume says, will recall Sir Edwin Landseer's celebrated picture, "A Distinguished Member of the Humane Society:"

"At the sad disaster to the steamship Metropolis on the coast of North Carolina, while the life saving men were engaged in rescuing the crowd of passengers thrown into the sea by the breaking up of the vessel, a large Newfoundland dog belonging to a gentleman residing in the vicinity seemed suddenly to comprehend the situation, and joining the throng of rescuers plunged into the surf, seized a drowning man and dragged him safely ashore. Shortly afterward he left his master and went to the station of the crew with whom he rendered his first service in life saving, and there he still remains, steadily resisting every inducement to return to his former master. Every alternate night he sets out with one of the first patrol and accompanies him until the patrolman from the next station below is met, when he joins the latter and proceeds with him to that station, where he remains until the first watch of the next night, when he returns to his own station in the same manner. These self assumed duties he performs with the peculiar gravity of demeanor that distinguishes his species, changing his station daily, for some good and sufficient dog reason no doubt, while very sensibly keeping but one watch each night."

DAVID SWING'S SUCCESSOR.

Rev. Dr. Newell D. Hillis Accepts the Pastorate of Central Church, Chicago.



REV. N. D. HILLIS.

Rev. Dr. Newell D. Hillis, who succeeds the late Professor David Swing as pastor of Central church, Chicago, is a young man, but his eloquence has already won for him the sobriquet of "the new Beecher." He was born in Iowa 36 years ago, and choosing the ministry as his vocation he studied at the Lake Forest university and the McCormack Theological seminary. His first call was to the Presbyterian church of Peoria, Ills., which he left in 1890 to succeed Dr. Noyes as pastor of the First Presbyterian church of Evanston, Ills., where his brilliancy and logic soon made his name widely known. His sermons are always interesting and never stereotyped, and yet he preaches the gospel.

He has made a careful study of social conditions, and it is said that he once declined to hear a celebrated minister in London in order that he might be present in Trafalgar square and hear John Burns, the great labor leader, make one of his famous speeches. Northwestern university conferred upon him the degree of doctor of divinity in 1892, and many other colleges have honored him. He has shown himself possessed of very liberal religious views, and two years ago he attracted considerable attention by his defense of Professor Henry Preserved Smith of Cincinnati, who was on trial for heresy in the Presbyterian general assembly. About a year ago, too, he favored keeping the Presbyterian seminaries free from the control of the general assembly, a procedure that was opposed by the conservative element in the church.

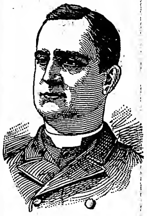
Dr. Hillis says that he will make no attempt to lead Central church back to Presbyterianism. "My only effort," he says, "will be to translate Christianity in the modern forms of thinking and to shape Christianity without regard to Presbyterianism. The sermon on the mount is my creed, and it is enough."

The congregation of Central church is composed of Methodists, Episcopalians, Presbyterians and others. Dr. Hillis' salary as pastor will be $10,000 a year, and he will be allowed a three months' vacation.

MGR. SATOLLI'S NEW SECRETARY.

Rev. Dr. Frederick Rooker, Vice Rector of the American College In Rome.

Rev. Dr. Frederick Rooker, who has been appointed secretary to Mgr. Satolli, the apostolic delegate, to succeed the Rev. Dr. Hector Papi, is a son of Myron H. Rooker, for many years editor of the Albany Press and Knickerbocker. He was born in Albany in 1861, received his preliminary education in the schools of Albany and later attended Union college for two years. He also worked on his father's newspaper and displayed decided talent for the business.



REV. DR. FREDERICK ROOKER.

His aim, however, was the church, and after a tour abroad he returned to Albany and began preparations to enter the American college in Rome. Soon after he was ordained he became a member of the faculty of the American college and later was appointed vice rector of the institution. He was a favorite pupil of Mgr. Satolli and held the chair of dogma when the papal delegate came to America to attend the celebration of the centennial of the hierarchy's establishment in America.

That Father Rooker was highly esteemed in Rome was shown a little more than a year ago when he was dispatched to America with messages from Pope Leo XIII to Mgr. Satolli and Cardinal Gibbons. He was also the papal representative at the twenty-fifth anniversary of the elevation of Cardinal Gibbons to the bishopric and bearer of the pope's gift to Cardinal Gibbons. This gift was a portrait of the pope inclosed in a frame of gold studded with precious stones.

At the time Dr. Rooker delivered the pope's messages it was rumored that he was to become Mgr. Satolli's secretary, but the rumor proved unfounded at the time. Owing to the fact that Secretary Papi is to become a Jesuit, however, there is now a vacancy in the secretaryship, and it is said Dr. Rooker will soon assume the duties of the office. Dr. Rooker is a handsome man, with a stalwart, somewhat portly figure and a dignified presence. He speaks several languages fluently and is a very well educated and cultured man.

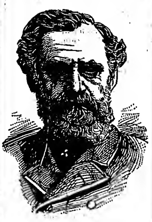
A FREE LANCE IN POLITICS.

The Picturesque and Interesting Career of Carl Schurz.

Carl Schurz, who has been re-elected president of the National Civil Service Reform league, is a pioneer and has long been one of the foremost leaders in the reform. As secretary of the interior he introduced competitive examinations, and since retiring from the cabinet of President Hayes in 1881 he has labored actively with voice and pen for the promotion of the movement.

Carl Schurz has had a singularly eventful and interesting career. Born near Cologne, Prussia, March 2, 1829, he was educated in the University of Bonn and early took an active interest in politics. He was such an ardent reformer that he joined the revolutionists and was soon compelled to flee from his native land. He went to Paris, thence to London and finally came to America in 1852. He located first in Philadelphia and a few years later moved to Wisconsin. There he joined the Republican party, then in its infancy, and soon gained great political influence with his German fellow citizens. He soon acquired good command of the English language and was a power on the stump in the memorable campaign of 1860.



CARL SCHURZ.

President Lincoln made him minister to Spain, but he resigned in 1862 to enter the Federal army as brigadier general of volunteers. He was made a major general in 1863 and served with distinction in the second battle of Bull Run and at Chancellorsville, Gettysburg, Fredericksburg and Chattanooga.

Mr. Schurz's political affiliations have been various. He served as a Republican United States senator from Missouri from 1869 to 1875. He was temporary chairman of the convention that nominated General Grant for president in 1868, and four years later he presided over the convention that nominated Greeley. In 1876 he supported Hayes, and he served four years in the cabinet of that president. He supported Garfield in 1880 and Cleveland in 1884, 1888 and 1892. His last vote, in November, 1894, was cast against the Democrats, but with which party he will be identified in the next campaign is one of the problems of politics.

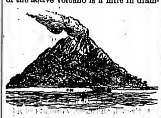
Since his retirement from office Mr. Schurz has lived in New York city. For three years he edited The Evening Post and is now interested in one of the German-American steamship lines.

AMBRIM'S ACTIVE VOLCANO.

The Island Belongs to a Group Noted For Making Sudden Disappearances.

Ambrim, one of the New Hebrides islands in the southern Pacific, was recently destroyed by an earthquake and volcanic disturbances. On Nov. 13 an earthquake shook the island to its remotest foundations, and an entire village, inhabitants and all, was cast into the sea. A volcano became suddenly active, and a great stream of lava rushed across the island a stream of fire and plunged into the sea, causing a dense pillar of steam to rise thousands of feet into the air. These islands have long been noted for their now-you-see-me-and-now-you-don't character. In 1871 Aurora, one of the most fertile islands of the group and some 36 miles long and five miles broad, suddenly sank into the sea, leaving no trace of its existence.

Ambrim is or was 50 miles in circumference, and was fertile and well cultivated. It had become celebrated for its excellent coffee. The center of the island is now a mass of lava, and the crater of the active volcano is a mile in diameter and 1,000 feet deep, according to the calculations of the officers of her majesty's steamship Dart, who witnessed the eruption and later ventured to visit the scene of the outbreak. In 1886 the volcano was active, and it then had a height of some 8,500 feet.



AMBRIM, THE ISLAND DESTROYED BY THE VOLCANO.

According to the last census, there are about 20 islands in the New Hebrides group. One of the curiosities of the islands is a peculiar species of hog, which, when full grown, is no larger than an ordinary rabbit. The natives, who belong to the Papua negro race, are less intelligent than the majority of South Sea islanders and are addicted to cannibalism. The group was discovered by Quiros in 1606, but he saw only one island, which he named Austria del Espiritu Santo. Cook discovered the greater part of the entire group in 1778 and gave the islands the name they now bear. Erromango, one of the most southerly islands, was the scene of the murder of the well known missionary, Rev. John Williams, in 1839.

FIRST round for Jones in the Jones-Meehan mill at Thief River Falls. Hoke Smith decided in his favor.

THE St. Paul Globe says that Minneapolis politicians are beginning to think that Washburn is defeated already and are looking for a man to substitute in his place—Charlie Pillsbury or somebody. We don't believe that, but if it should be so they will make a big mistake, for if they can't win with Washburn they can't with anybody. Washburn is the best man they have to offer, but the question is: "Shall Minneapolis have the senatorship forever, or shall the country have it once in a while?" The fight is not against Mr. Washburn as a man, and if the country can not get the place and Minneapolis has to have it, Washburn can get it sooner than any other man. Mark that prediction.

HILL DENIES IT.

Gives The Administration Some Red Hot Shots.

"There is not a word of truth in it," said President J. J. Hill, in reply to a statement made in a Washington dispatch that there would be a conference this week between President Cleveland and J. J. Hill and other financiers of the country, to consider the new substitute currency bill. "I was not interviewed in New York," continued Mr. Hill, "neither was I in Washington, and I was not in the conference of June, 1893, when it was decided to call the extra session. As far as the effect on the country is concerned, I think the administration has done all the harm it is capable of doing. The public must look for relief from another quarter. The present want of harmony in the majority in congress makes it impossible for any good legislation to come from this congress. The best relief they can give the country is to adjourn and go home. There hasn't been a day in six years that I can remember but that the greatest fear has been of some stupid action on the part of congress. They should appoint a commission of some 21 members from among the bankers of the country, the political economists and the business men to investigate the whole situation and prepare some financial system, and when that has been done let congress go to work and pass the bill. Not one of these men now at the head of affairs could go out and make a good living, not one could command a salary of $10,000 a year from any large commercial house, and these are the men that are trying to adjust our financial affairs."

Sauk Centre Avalanche: And now S. G. Comstock, of Moorhead, has entered the list for the U. S. Senatorship. Since this announcement has been made the friends of W. D. Washburn are bustling more than ever to repair that gentleman's badly dilapidated fences. The nearer the time come for the final roundup, the more desperate do the Washburn men become.

Alexandria Post-News: There is unquestionably in the country districts strong opposition to Mr Washburn. It is partly prejudice caused by a monopoly of this office by the Twin Cities, and is partly prejudice against Mr. Washburn's associates and chief supporters, who are practicaly all from the moneied class. Mr. Comstock, on the other hand, would be satisfactory to all interests. He is a man of means, and his home, with all his material interests, are in this great and purely agricultural district. He is a big man physically and mentally, a broad-minded, able, dignified man.

The Phoenix: Never in its history was there a more popular issue in the state, following so closely upon the heels of the heated election contest, and as the time approaches for the assemblage of the legislature, Mr. Comstock's name is winning renewed enthusiasm in all quarters. Mr. Comstock is a model republican, who never shirked his duty.

Winnebago City Press-News: Mr. Comstock enjoys the distinction of being one of the ablest speakers the Republican state central committee sent out during the recent campaign. Most any good man would be acceptable to southern Minnesota, for the indications are pretty plain that the present incumbent, Mr. Washburn, is far from popular with the masses in this section of the state.

Rush City Post: S. G. Comstock has announced himself a candidate for senator, and naturally the politicians have been in a flutter ever since. Senator Washburn will now know exactly how to fight and who to fight, and it is quite likely that he will proceed to stick up his fence posts with much deliberateness. It will be very necessary for Mr. Washburn to put the posts deep into the ground.

ENDORSES COMSTOCK.

The Glyndon News, in its issue of last week, has the following to say about Mr. Comstock and his candidacy for the United States Senate:

"The unexpected has happened, and Senator Washburn has opposition in his canvass for re-election. It comes from Clay county, and in the person of Mr. Comstock, who is convinced that Mr. Washburn's strength does not chiefly consist in the fact that he is the present senator. In other words, that courtesy is not to govern; that there are many Republican members-elect of the legislature who are at least indifferent to Mr. Washburn's political fortunes and inclined away from him and to a "country" candidate for his place, i. e. one not from Minneapolis or St. Paul.

In this view Mr. Comstock has many elements of strength as a candidate. He is well known in Minneapolis, from prolonged service as representative and senator at the capitol, from his term in congress as Gov. Nelson's successor in 1889-90, and from his many times proved ability and merit in various capacities and experiences. He enjoys also large popularity and esteem in the circles where senators and other high functionaries are made—at least as to the finishing processes of their making. As the first to come out in his own name and person he will take a commanding position in "the field," with which Mr. Washburn will be called on to cope; and whether or not our "senior senator" shall find it his lot to lay down his scepter in obedience to a greater than himself, the News is constrained to say that its utterance of three weeks ago, (if any may chance to remember it) must be modified at least to the extent of saying that any monopoly or patent right that the St. Paul Globe may have acquired to the "war" on Washburn has now got away from that malevolent sheet and given place to a movement which needs no Democratic co-operation and will accept none. It will be a Republican fight, with Clay county and North Minnesota Republicans eager and loyal in support of their champion and representative."

The Detroit Free Press, a Populist paper says of Comstock: S. G. Comstock, of Moorhead, has opened up headquarters in St. Paul and formely seled his castor into the ring as a senatorial candidate. Well you never can tell where lightning will strike and if it must be a Republican, we don't know of any one we had sooner see get it than Comstock. Besides this takes it away from the cities and it is high time that the country districts were recognized.

SCIENTIFIC MISCELLANY.

Unclaimed Wealth of the Vegetable World and of the Ocean—Electricity the Modern Cosmetic—Insect Vision—Mapping the United States—Wonderful Prehistoric Surgery—Chrysostase and its Unique Property—A New Safety Boiler.

Though Emerson suggested that every weed is a plant whose use is not yet understood, the number of plants that have been brought into service by man is very small. Edson S. Bastin finds authority for the statement that 1192 species have been at some time cultivated for food, and that the total known to have been used as food is 4,090. But many of these are of little value, and "Smith's Dictionary of Economic Plants" gives only 515 species as those important for any purposes. For medicine some 3,000 plants have been employed, of which the United States Dispensatory enumerates 1300, while only 244 are given in the Pharmacopœia. The plants not yet investigated offer great possibilities, which, however, can only be developed by long and extensive government experiment. The named species may be taken as about 175,000 and possibly as many more remain to be discovered, while many species are capable of great variation through cultivation. The apple had yielded about 1500 different varieties up to a few years ago, yet some other species of the genus may be quite as capable of useful development. The different varieties of wheat are believed by some to have their origin in an unimportant forage grass, and a wild plant still growing on English and French coasts has given us the red and white cabbages, cauliflower, and perhaps even the common turnip. From the little explored fields of bacteria and fungi may be expected many useful products.

By its tonic influence upon the heart, blood vessels and general circulation, electricity tends to maintain the normal nutrition in the skin as well as in other tissues. It is therefore largely employed to improve the complexion, states Prof. J. V. Shoemaker, in a variety of cases that are not actually disease, but are on the border-line and probably due to faulty nutrition. Among the defects so treated are muddiness of complexion, yellowness due to disordered liver, oiliness, from relaxed sebaceous ducts, redness of nose, due to sluggish circulation, dryness and roughness of the skin, and pigmented spots and patches, including freckles.

That gold should exist in the ocean is an induction that Dr. Henry Wurtz claims to have presented in 1866, and in 1872 the discovery was made by E. Sonstadt. Assuming 0.9 grain for each ton of sea-water, it is computed that the entire ocean contains over $80,000,000,000,000,000 of gold. One of the problems of the future, Dr. Wurtz now predicts, will be the getting of some of this gold by electrolysis.

That insects do not see well, especially to a distance, is a conclusion reached by A. Mallack, from observation and calculation. Their composite eye, however, has an advantage over the simple eye in the fact that there is hardly any practical limit to its nearness of vision. The best insect eye examined would give a picture about as good as if executed in coarse wool-work and viewed from a foot's distance.

The United States Geological Survey, established about fourteen years ago, is doing work not suggested by its title, about half its energies and annual appropriations, according to Marcus Baker, being devoted to making a topographical map of the country. More or less work of this kind has been done in all but 4 or 5 of the 49 states and territories. The total area mapped to-day is nearly 600,000 square miles, or about one-fifth of the United States, and during the last few years the areas surveyed have been from 40,000 to 50,000 square miles per year. Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut and New Jersey are already completely mapped on the largest scale, their legislatures having co-operated to hasten the work. The various scales are 1:250,000 (about 4 miles to an inch), 1:125,000 and 1:62,500, the contour intervals ranging from 250 or 200 feet to ten or even 5 feet in flat regions. The sheets on the smallest scale, which is no longer used, cover one degree of latitude by one degree of longitude. The entire work is designed to be accurate to scale, which means, if it is assumed that a hundredth of an inch is the limit of visible error on the published map, that each point on the largest scale must be located within 53 feet of its true position in nature. The total cost thus far has been somewhat over $2,000,000,000, with recent annual expenditures of about $250,000.

One of the remarkable accomplishments of the ancient Peruvians—who excelled in engineering, agriculture, mining, weaving and every other art of civilization—was trepanning, which is so difficult and hazardous that recovery follows only about a fourth of the modern operations. The great Muniz collection, temporarily in the custody of the Bureau of American Ethnology, contains about 1,000 specimens of prehistoric Peruvian skulls, of which 19 are trepanned, and 8 give indications of subsequent recovery. A young female seems to have survived a series of operations, resulting in an aperture in the skull 4 inches long and an inch wide, which was covered by a silver plate.

A new substance having the remarkable and unique property of solidifying when heated and remaining liquid at temperatures below zero, has been reported by a German chemist. It has been named Chryostass, and is obtained by mixing together equal parts of phenol, camphor and saponine, adding a somewhat smaller proportion of essence of turpentine. Certain substances, like the albumens, harden on heating, but this is the only product that again liquifies on cooling.

The novel safety boiler of M. Chatenel, a French engineer, consists of a nest of horizontal tubes placed over the furnace. Water is injected into this nest as spray—never in solid bulk—and is instantaneously evaporated and superheated. The steam producing power is remarkable, and the tubes, it is claimed, do not burn out.

The existence of a horse with a large toe attached to each hoof has been announced from Farnborough, Kent, England. This seems to be a reversion to a primitive type, the toe being a feature of the extinct animals discovered by Marsh and pronounced by Huxley the progenitors of our horses.

Dr. Shields, an eminent physician of Tennessee, says: "I regard Ayer's Sarsaparilla as the best blood-medicine on earth, and I know of many wonderful cures affected by it's use." Physicians all over the land have made similar statements.

"A Trip On the North-Western Limited between the Twin Cities and Chicago is like rolling in a King's Palace over two smooth rails. If the traveling public of thirty years ago had been told of the beauties and comforts of this fine train the story would have been thought a fairy tale. But it is all a reality now and the wonder is what new comfort or luxury will come in the future. Whatever it is, it will surely be found on The North-Western Line long before other lines think to adopt it."—The Press, Osceola, Wis.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla

Words of Comfort to All who Suffer from Dyspepsia.

"For years, I was a martyr to indigestion, and had about given up all hope of ever finding relief, as the complaint only seemed to grow worse instead of better, under ordinary treatment. At last, I was induced to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and I hereby testify that after using only three bottles, I was cured. I can, therefore, confidently recommend this medicine to all similarly afflicted."—FRANKLIN BECK, Avoca, Ia.

Rev. Lee W. Squier welcomed the arrival of a son and heir at his home on Thursday of last week.

Joe. Gervais started this week on a trip through the southern states of several weeks duration.

The Columbia club hall on New Year's eve is said to have been a very pleasant affair as usual.

Rev. R. H. Battey spent Thursday in the city and left in the evening via the N. P. R. R. for the twin cities.

Mrs. Ben. Clements left Thursday evening on the N. P. delayed train for a visit to her old home in Canada.

Steenerson Bros. have been sending men and teams to the woods for the past week to take advantage of the improved sleighing.

Prof. Thomas Casey was in the city from Red Lake Thursday chatting with old time friends of whom he has many.

Mr. and Mrs. Geo. A. Ralph went to Chicago last week to attend the funeral of Mr. Lowe, Mrs. Ralph's father, returning this week.

Bert Bivins came down from Argyle on Saturday to join his wife who has been visiting relatives in the city. They visited in the city New Years day.

The new auditor, John Gleason, has appointed W. L. Vannet deputy auditor. Mr. Vannett has filled that position for some time very acceptably and the choice is a good one.

Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Sawyer welcomed the arrival of a little stranger at their home on Sunday. C. E. feels that the only point of dissatisfaction he has is in the fact that Woman's Suffrage has got to become the law of the land before the new arrival is entitled to vote.

The farewell benefit given to J. S. Schefstad at the M. E. church on Tuesday evening was fairly well attended and enjoyable. It was well worth the admission fee to hear Harry Walker warble. Schefstad goes to Germany to complete his musical education.

Beaudry and Mathews, county treasurer and deputy were as busy as they could be on Monday attending to the tax-payers, who were anxious to get their money in before the five-cent penalty attaches. They say that taxes are paid up better this year than for several years before.

While eastern states have been buried out of sight with the beautiful, we have hardly had enough snow to keep us from getting lonesome. We may get lots of it yet, so we need not begin to worry—not for a while, at least. If this month passes without any and the next, we may begin to think we are to have none this winter.

Nels Nyegard, one of the Bella Coola colonists returned this week and reports that there is great dissatisfaction in the colony. Says the land is no good for agricultural purposes even if it was cleared, which it will take years to accomplish. He says that we will, sooner or later, see every mother's son of the colonists back here just as soon as they can get back. While it is true that times here have been tough for farmers, it is also true that they are not as well off elsewhere.

The Rev. McDermid closed his labors at the Baptist church on Sunday evening and left on Monday morning for his home. Mr. McDermid is a forcible speaker and his words carry conviction, from the fact that one cannot listen to him long before he feels that the speaker is dead in earnest—sincerely believes in the entire truth of all he says, and he presents an array of facts hard to overcome. His labors here, we think, were not crowned with that great abundance of success that he would liked to have seen, but we feel positive that they will yield a far greater weight of glory than he knows of, for they must have been the cause of greater activity among church members—professing christians. At the Sabbath evening service a number were baptized and a large audience was present to hear him for the last time.

THIRTY-THREE FEET AT A BOUND.

The Tremendous Leap Made by a Hungry Wildcat After His Breakfast.

The wonderful power of a wildcat is shown in its ability to leap long distances. All of the cat tribe have immense power in their legs, and they make up in the length of their spring their inability to make a continued chase. African leopards in captivity have been known to leap from the floor of the cages and strike the top, 12 feet above. Tigers make tremendous leaps and strike down on their prey with a blow of their powerful paws as they alight. But the wildcat, for its size, is probably the most wonderful jumper of all the felines.

A hunter who is well known for his veracity recently told the following story of an adventure which illustrates this power:

"I was hunting in the snow and came across the track of a wildcat, which I followed for a long distance. Suddenly the tracks came to an end in a spot where the animal had crouched. I looked around to see what had become of the trail, and away head of me saw a bunch of blood and feathers. From that spot the track led on again off into a swamp. The situation was susceptible to but one explanation—the wildcat had been hunting for his dinner and had discovered a pheasant wandering about in the snow. The cat crept as close as he dared to the unsuspecting bird and gathered himself into an animated spiral spring, such as the cat tribe coil themselves into when preparing to spring, and releasing the trigger shot into the air, landing on top of the victim before the bird, quick as pheasants usually are, could evade the stroke. The distance from where the cat crouched to where it caught the bird was just 33 feet. I naturally supposed from the length of the leap that the cat was young and in full activity, but after I trailed it to the swamp and shot it I discovered that it was old and almost toothless. The animal's hunger may have spurred him to the great jump. If not, and the leap was an evidence of what a superannuated wildcat can do, I wouldn't be surprised to learn that a young and active wildcat could clear at least twice that distance when pressed by necessity."—Boston Journal.

A LOVE STRATAGEM.

And Bob Will Not Go Out of Nights With the Boys Any More.

He had married the girl of his heart, and she was all his fancy painted her, and more, too, and he should have been as happy as a clam at high water, but he wasn't. Somehow he had got in with the old fast set and took to spending his evenings away from home, running around town with the boys.

His wife remonstrated, made herself charming and agreeable, but failed to keep him at home in the society of herself and their friends. Things were going from bad to worse when she suddenly hit on a scheme to recall him to herself.

One night he was particularly requested to come home early. He, as usual, failed to comply, and it was midnight when he hurried up to his steps, opened the door with his latchkey and found his home a blaze of light and filled with a large company. He was met by his best man of a year before, who, in full evening dress, hurried him up stairs.

"Marry me over again?" gasped Bob, blinking about in the light. "What do you mean?"

"Oh, it's a custom of his to visit each couple he marries on the anniversary of their wedding day, and, after asking a lot of questions, to read the vows over and have them respond. He thinks it's a good idea, and so do we all."

"Where's Nellie?"

"Down stairs in her wedding dress, looking sweet as a peach, waiting for you."

When Bob entered the parlor, he looked like anything but a happy bridegroom. He was shamefaced and worried, but when he saw Nellie, as fair and lovely as she had looked at their nuptials, he braced up, and in a few minutes was listening to the "I charge ye" of the minister and feeling very much as if it were solemn as a funeral.

Then came congratulations and presents and social merrymaking, and when the company left Bob told them that he would begin a new honeymoon that should last as long as he lived.

And he kept his word. He says that if young married people could keep their anniversaries in that manner they would not forget the obligations binding upon them, and he gives his Nellie credit for having a long head as well as a loyal heart.—Detroit Free Press.

Photographing on Tissue.

From some unknown source the following unique method of photographing designs on tissues is reported: The tissues are first plunged in a bath of primuline, to which common salt has been added; they are then washed and afterward immersed for a quarter of a minute in a bath containing .25 per cent of nitrate of soda, strongly acidulated by nitric or hydrochloric acid. After another washing, and while the tissue is still moist, or after it has been dried in the dark, the photographic negative plates to be reproduced are applied above, and the whole exposed to the light, on a clear day and in brilliant sunlight half a minute exposure sufficing, but on a dull day 30 minutes being required. After the lapse of the necessary time, a small piece of tissue exposed being used as a test of the printing, the tissue is plunged into the developing bath; if not, it is placed in the dark, the development being carried out as for colors dyed in wool. As in the process of ordinary photograph printing, familiar to all, the color is developed in this method at the spots where the plates have prevented the action of the light, while it is not developed elsewhere, and interesting work is the result.—New York Sun.

Flowerpots.

All new flowerpots require to be soaked in water and allowed to dry thoroughly before being used. The soil does not hang well to the sides of garden pots unless so treated. Dirty pots are open to the same objection. Let any one try to put a plant with fresh soil into a pot which has been used before and left unwashed, and he will find in a few days, when the soil begins to dry, that it leaves a space and does not adhere as it should to the sides of it. No plant can possibly flourish under such circumstances. The roots of a plant draw to the sides of a pot naturally in search of moisture, and growth, of course, is checked if a current of air is allowed to pass between them and the sides. Some plants exhibit this tendency in such a remarkable degree that few roots are to be seen, except a network on the outside of the soil next the pot. —Florist.

To Clean Bronzes.

It is not a good plan to clean bronzes, as the polish is very easily spoiled, but if necessary nothing is better than cleaning them with water and ammonia, using a stiff brush like a nailbrush. Dry carefully after rinsing thoroughly. They should be carefully dusted every day with a soft cloth and a feather brush, and a little sweet oil may be rubbed on occasionally. To remove stains from bronze make the article very hot by dipping it in boiling water; then rub it with a piece of flannel dipped in suds made from yellow soap, rubbing clean with soft linen cloths.—Chicago Herald.

The Word "Boss."

The word "boss," so commonly applied by an inferior to one of higher grade in the United States, is not, as generally supposed, American in its origin. It comes from the Low German and is heard frequently in continental Europe. In Germany one often sees the sign "Schlaf-Baas," which, translated, means the boss of a lodging house.—Hardware.

SHORT SWORDS FOR TWO.

A Story of What Might Have Been Among Old Time Senators.

The late Judge L. Q. C. Lamar possessed a remarkable peculiarity. Unusual excitement seemed to act upon his nerves like an opiate and put him to sleep. This was strongly exemplified after his remarkable verbal encounter with the great New Yorker, Mr. Conkling. Mr. Lamar, after scarifying Mr. Conkling for life, leaving him with burning yet deferential resentment, closed as follows:

"I apologize to the senate for this seeming unparliamentary language" (advancing to the New Yorker and throwing his index finger full in his face), "language that no man, good man, deserves, and no brave man will wear." Immediately Mr. Lamar walked to the cloakroom on the Democratic side, lay down on a sofa, and in three minutes was sleeping as calmly as a babe. There was great excitement. It was believed Mr. Conkling would not submit to the language applied to him, and that, while he probably would not challenge Lamar, being an athlete, he would meet him on the streets and assault him. The late Senator Zeb Vance, a Hercules in stature, who was devoted to Mr. Lamar, without the knowledge of that gentleman or of any other human being, shadowed Mr. Lamar for some days, explaining afterward that if Conkling ever struck Lamar he intended to beat him to death. Mr. Vance, however, did not know what those intimately acquainted with Mr. Lamar knew. In all probability Mr. Lamar could have whipped them both. He prided himself upon his muscle and has often said to the writer, "I believe I am better fitted for a prize fighter than I am for a senator." It was apprehended by some that Conkling would challenge Mr. Lamar. Conkling was known to be an expert with the short sword. Mr. Lamar said afterward to an intimate friend in discussing the matter, "If Mr. Conkling had sent me a challenge, I should have chosen short swords."

"Why, Mr. Lamar," replied his friend, "Conkling is an expert with the short sword."

"I know that," replied the senator, "but I took some lessons with the short sword myself when I was in Paris the time that I was sent by the Confederacy on a mission to Russia."

"Why, senator," the friend replied, "you have not had a short sword in your hand in 20 years."

"I know that," coolly replied the senator, "but I should have chosen short swords."—New Orleans Picayune.

Toad Superstitions.

Superstitions as to toads having been early inculcated, it has been exceedingly difficult to get rid of them. One remnant of this ancient credulity still exists. It is in regard to the absolute imperishable character of the toad. There are well educated Americans who believe that a toad hops out alive from a slab of stone, though he has been imprisoned there for several millions of years. We give in brief Dr. Buckland's experiments with toads in 1825. He took 12 toads and had the toads put in 12 cells cut in sandstone, and over these he put plates of glass. They were buried in a garden for over a year. When exhumed, they were all dead. Then some were put in porous sandstone, and at the end of a year a few were found "greatly emaciated." When buried for another year, they all died. Toads were inclosed in wood, and they all died. The conclusion is that, deprived of atmosphere or without food, toads must die. If a toad as a tadpole could have entered a crevice in a rock, it might have grown, but would have died in time for want of air and food. This toad nonsense is so irradicable that it is supposable it never can be dissipated.—New York Times.

Didn't Make a Sale.

A Lewiston family, which traces its ancestry back beyond the Revolution, owns an old coat which is supposed to have been worn by a major in the colonial army, and which is stained by his blood. This coat hangs in a showcase in the hall, among other curiosities, and the family have for 50 years pointed to the yellow stain with pride. The other day a peddler came to the door and was left standing in the hall to await the lady's pleasure in seeing him. He sold some kind of infallible soap to remove stains, and seeing the coat and its honored stain he thought to please the owner by removing the discolor.

"You see, madam, that this soap is sure to remove stains of all kinds," he said when she appeared, and he pointed to the coat.

He did not sell any soap there.—Lewiston Journal.

He Probably Guessed It.

"No, I don't want it cut, and I don't want it trimmed," snarled the shaggy haired young man, seating himself in the chair and glaring savagely at the barber, "and I'm not a football player nor a pianist, and I haven't taken any vow not to have it cut. Perhaps that will save you the trouble of asking questions. All I want is a shave."

"Yes, sir."

The barber worked in silence for ten minutes.

"I have a brother," he remarked at last, "that's got a head shaped just like yours. He has to wear his hair the same way."—Chicago Tribune.

Wrecked.

"Is there any history attached to this ragged old hat?" asked the visitor. "It looks as if it had been in a powder mill explosion."

"No, it belonged to a Russian general," said the museum owner.

"Oh! And he tried to talk through it, eh?"—Cincinnati Tribune.

Lofty Sarcasm.

"What did the critics think of your play?" inquired one author of another.

"Think about it? They did not think about it at all. They merely wrote about it."—Washington Star.

REX MORITUR EXSUL.

"We know no king, no God, no master, we!"
What wonder when your passions know no master?
When morbid, moonstruck, measureless vanity,
The mock of nations, whirl you faster
Toward the steep doom of downfall and disaster—
A ruin deeper than the unfathomed sea?
Vainglorious fools, your chronic rage is vain!
Birth royal is nature's gift, as brawn or brain,
And natural right thrones high above your mob
Of silly months and maws, whose slender sense
The froth of individual impotence
Stirs to ridiculous rage that fain would rob
The sun of right to shine in heaven, if thence
Absinthe nerves might thrill and pothouse pulses throb.

POLICE AND THE POODLES.

Ladies Who Want Officers Detailed to Protect Their Pet Dogs.

"Some folks have strange ideas as to the duties of the police force," said the desk sergeant.

"When I was at the North Chicago avenue station, for instance, I remember a case. A lady rang me up one afternoon and said she wanted two policemen sent to her residence at once. She lived on Dearborn avenue, and when she told me her name I recognized it as that of a well known business man. I asked what the policemen were wanted for.

"'They will be told when they get here,' said she.

"'But, madam,' said I, 'I couldn't send two policemen to your house without knowing what they were going for, even if I wanted to. It's against the rules.'

"She thought it was a very strange rule, she said, which compelled her to state her private business over a telephone, but she finally told me what the trouble was. She said she had been out walking with her little dog, and that two very suspicious looking men had been watching her from the other side of the street. She was sure they meant to steal the dog, and she wanted them locked up. When I explained to her that we couldn't arrest anybody on such evidence, she gave a few more opinions about the police and rang off.

"I had a call something like this from a residence in Bellevue place. This one came by phone, too, and was from a lady. She wanted the patrol wagon sent to her house right away. She declined to tell me at first what it was wanted for, but when I refused to do anything until I knew something further she said an ugly dog was hanging about her back steps, and that she couldn't let her dogs out to play in the yard, as this dog insisted on playing with them and was not the kind of a dog she wanted her dogs to associate with. I told her that I couldn't send the patrol wagon on such an errand, but said I would have the dog taken to the pound by the wagon on its way there next day. She said she didn't want the dog there overnight, and I suggested that perhaps he would go away of his own accord when he saw he was being snubbed. She hung up her phone with a bang, and as I learned afterward reported me at headquarters." —Chicago Times.

Japanese Love For Children.

Next to their frugality and exquisite neatness a remarkable thing about the Japanese is their great love for the little folks. They have an extraordinary talent for making their doll babies happy. They are forever inventing comical toys and designing fantastic little playthings to amuse them. With us the grandfathers and grandmammas are the children's playfellows and best friends. Over in the sunny little empire all the world has nothing more important to do than provoke the pleasure of his own child or the Mr. Little Boy or Miss Little Girl of his neighbor, as they are always called. At the bazaar, on fete days, at festivals and concerts, the indescribable little creatures are seen pickaback, with their sweet, round yellow arms tightened lovingly about some big sister's or big brother's neck. They have peppered jam, iced beans and pickled sweetmeats to their hearts' content, delicious tarts jellied to laurel or lemon leaf, and as many dolls, kites and colored lanterns as they can possibly carry away from the booths.—Tokyo Letter.

There Were Two Kinds of Fish.

Mr. Broker says he has changed his restaurant down town, "so he can know what he's getting." His mind got uncertain about his old place after an experience he had last Friday. Friday is "fish day" at this place, and Mr. B. likes fish when it is "just right." So he cast his eye over the bill of fare and remarked: "Lizzie, how is the boiled codfish today? If it is good, you may bring me some; but, you mind, if it isn't good I don't want it. Do you see?"

Lizzie saw and departed, and then, Mr. Broker says, he heard her call down the shaft of the dumb waiter in the rear, "One boiled cod, please, off the new fish!"—Pittsburg Bulletin.

Fish, Flesh, Herring.

"Neither fish nor flesh nor good red herring" occurs in Dryden's Epilogue to his Duke of Guise (182). The Epilogue takes the form of a dialogue between the actress who spoke it and a Trimmer, and ends with this exclamation:

D——d neuters, in their middle way of steering,
They're neither fish nor flesh nor good red herring.

—Macmillan's Magazine.

Fabre, in 1855, ended a series of experiments by which he concluded that by careful cultivation for 12 years he had produced a species of perfect wheat from a common grass growing in southern Europe.

Dr. Johnson said, "No man in his senses, if he could get a young girl, would marry a widow." He himself married a widow many years his senior.

The St. Croix river, in Maine, was named from the cross made by two rivers at its mouth.

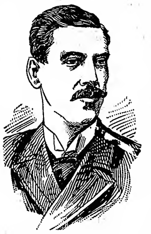
THE HONDURAS FAIR.

CENTRAL AMERICAN REPUBLICS PREPARING AN EXPOSITION FOR 1896.

The Scene Will Be the Beautiful Villa Nueva, "the Garden Spot of the World," In the Republic of Honduras—An American Director General.

Inspired by the example of the United States, Central America is awakening from her tropical lethargy and will hold a grand international fair in February, 1896. It will be called the Central American exposition, will be participated in by the governments of Honduras, Costa Rica, Nicaragua, Guatemala and San Salvador, and will be held in the beautiful valley of Villa Nueva, in Spanish Honduras, not far from where Christopher Columbus first set foot upon the soil of North America, explored the coast of Honduras and Costa Rica, suffered from famine, mutiny and other disasters and returned to Spain to die two years later in poverty and neglect. The site is said to be one of the most beautiful spots on earth, and it possesses the further advantages of being on the Honduras railroad, only 60 miles from Puerto Cortez, one of the principal ports of Honduras, on the Atlantic coast and on the banks of the navigable Ulue, about the same distance from the ocean.

One hundred and fifty acres of land will be devoted to the exhibition proper, and the buildings will be of iron, with an exterior of staff like the structures at the World's fair. The facade of the main building will be a series of five pavilions representing the five republics engaged in the exposition enterprise. In front of the main building will be a grand plaza containing a triumphal arch surmounted by a statue of Francisco Morazan, a Honduras general who became president of the republic of Central America in 1830, was driven into exile ten years later and was put to death in 1842. He has been called the "Washington of Central America."



PRESIDENT BONILLA.

Across the plaza, from the main building, will stand the Administration palace, and to the right and left will be located the Horticultural and Floricultural buildings. A broad boulevard lined with stately trees will completely encircle the grounds, and beyond it will be located the hotels, theaters, restaurants and places of amusement. The lighting at night will be done by electricity, and a gravity railroad will carry sightseers to the top of a lofty plateau, from which may be obtained a magnificent view of what Humboldt called "the garden spot of the world."

The exhibits at the exposition will be classed in 17 groups, as follows: Food and its accessories; forestry and forest products, horticulture, viticulture, pomology, horses and mules, cattle and sheep, other animals used for food, flesh and their products, mines, minerals and metallurgy; machinery, transportation, electricity, manufactured articles, liberal arts, fine arts and unified governmental exhibits.

At the head of the exposition project is Dr. Policarpo Bonilla, the enterprising young president of Honduras, and he has very sensibly surrounded himself by a corps of assistants who are well qualified by previous experience to materially aid in making the fair a success. The president of the exposition commission is Senor Don E. Constantina Fiallos, who was secretary of the Pan-American congress and secretary of the legation of Honduras a few years ago. He is a civil engineer, a graduate of Columbia college and a writer and lecturer of ability.

Dr. W. T. Thackery of Chicago, who was division superintendent of the manufactures department of the World's fair, has been appointed director general of the proposed exposition. He took a special interest in the tobacco and sarsaparilla exhibit of Honduras at the World's fair and was Honduras' commissioner at the California Midwinter fair. He has been in Tegucigalpa for five months consulting with President Bonilla and other prominent promoters of the exposition.

Honduras is only two days from New Orleans and four from New York by steamer. The climate is delightful, the uplands being no warmer than a September day in the northern part of the United States, and the scenery is of surpassing grandeur. Not many miles from the exposition are old Spanish fortifications and relics of the Aztecs, the wonderful Indians conquered by Cortez.

In Guatemala, near at hand, is the old city of Copan, which existed so long before the Aztecs that they possessed only the vaguest traditions concerning the extinct people who reared the imposing temples and quaintly carved monoliths that still puzzle the antiquarian.

It is believed that the merchants and manufacturers of the United States will find new or increased markets for their wares in Central America if they co-operate in making the exposition a success

YOUNG WOMAN, BEWARE.

Be Sure You Can Support a Man Before Marrying Him.

Breach of promise suits brought by man against women are becoming common. Evidently the emancipated woman is not doing her duty by her weaker and less capable brother. She wins his affections and then casts him off on a cold world without any visible means of support. It is not uncommon for women to be rich in their own right nowadays. Many women earn fine incomes. These self supporting women have not yet developed, along with other things masculine, the old, fine, manly sense of responsibility toward the loving and dependent. Will woman be in all respects the equal of man until she learns this lesson?

In the good time coming a young woman will consider it dishonorable to enter into a matrimonial engagement with a young man whom she has not the ability to support. Some of the half emancipated girls are so thoughtless. They lure a youth on to propose, well knowing that their salaries are barely sufficient to gratify their own feminine fancies. Or even heiresses will wed a poor young man, only to grow tired of him presently, when his charms begin to fade. Then he is divorced and forced to return to the ribbon counter and work for a living.

They manage those things better on the continent. There the custom allows a poor but honest prince to compel the American millionairess to settle a suitable marriage portion on him before he consents to accept her hand. Our own men can make a similar custom here if they will be equally firm. They owe it to themselves to do so. Young love is very beautiful, no doubt, but no true woman will think of marrying until she is able to support a husband.—Buffalo Express.

MUSIC AND SNAKES.

Water Reptiles Become Demonstrative at the Sound of an Instrument.

Noises of every kind have a peculiar attraction for water snakes, and incidentally it may be stated that water moccasins of the Dismal swamp region are nearly or quite as deadly in their bite as the land family of moccasins. If a pistol be fired two or three times over a pond, creek or any still body of water, the reptiles will suddenly appear from every quarter, seeming to be evolved out of thin air, so rapid is their coming, and they swim about for several moments in great agitation. Sometimes their numbers will swell to several hundred, and it is believed by the natives that on such occasions they are especially dangerous. The same result is attained if any musical instrument be played along shore or in a boat, except that the reptiles are less demonstrative, remaining nearly still upon the surface or hanging around upon bushes that overlap the water's edge.

The multitude of snakes to be seen in certain localities is so great that verily no man can number them. This is especially true after heavy rains, when the swamps are overflowed, and they are driven to the higher places. Removed from their regular haunts, they appear to be gregarious, huddling and crowding together, sluggish and indifferent to everything, as though utterly overcome of homesickness. Yet they are easily aroused and excited at the approach of man, when, seemingly inspired of courage through numbers, they decline to get out of his path and will show fight if he attempts to molest them.—Chicago Tribune.

Manners Over the Telephone.

"You didn't know, did you, that manners can be conveyed by wire? I can tell by each one of the people who talk to me just what his disposition is," says the brunette "Central," "and how he treats his clerks and employees, or, if he is an employee, just what sort of fellow he is. The 'phone' sharpens most people's voices a little, I know, but I'm not meaning that. It is their way of talking. I don't mean, of course, that the slow man at the 'phone' is slow in his business. But I can always tell if he is a gentleman. People who would be polite to me if they saw me," continues this young empress of a clerk, who knows the dignity of her personality, "are not in this reckoning. They are talking to an unknown creature, and by the way they speak to it, at the other end of the wire, I get to know what sort of people they are."—Philadelphia Times.

The Trolley Riders In Boston.

A story, bogus on the face of it, has been going the newspaper rounds telling how a woman boarded a Cambridge car and asked the conductor on his return trip to "please step into Mr. Gaffey's drug store and tell him to go next door and ask the woman there to go over to my house and see if I put out my oil stove." This is poppycock, but a similar incident of which I am sure occurred in a Brookline car recently. The speaker was a young man, and he was asking the conductor to "go into the car stable when you get back and telephone up to my roommate to look in my other clothes and find 5 cents to pay you for my fare this trip, as I'm broke."—Boston Budget.

Crispi Bears No Malice.

Long and intimately as I have known him, in and out of office, I have never heard him speak one spiteful or malicious word of any man, and no matter what may have been his personal relations with men, if their views on public matters agree, co-operation is certain. The rancor and personality which form so discouraging an element in Italian politics have no place in Crispi's nature.—W. J. Stillman in Century.

How Quince Tastes.

A quince is about the most worthless thing we know anything about. It is not good raw, and when preserved has a taste that reminds you of an old maid's kiss. It is simply a suggestion of something good.—Atchison Globe.

A Bad Sore Threatens the Loss of a Limb

Hood's Sarsaparilla Routs Disease and Gives Renewed Health.

"C. I. Hood & Co., Lowell, Mass.:

"I have used several dozen bottles of Hood's Sarsaparilla in my family and know its merits. I had a sore on one of my limbs below the knee which baffled the skill and treatment of several physicians. They were uncertain whether to call it erysipelas, cancer, scrofula or blood poisoning. Owing to my old age they thought I would have to have my leg amputated. It was badly swollen, nearly twice its usual size, and raw as well as painful, with a Burning, Itching Sensation.

"I had used Hood's Sarsaparilla before and so having great faith in its merits, I took it and effected a perfect cure of the eruption on my limb and also renovated and purified my whole system. Two years have since elapsed and I am now passed 75 years of age, and yet I have more energy and work harder than the average of men at 40. I have 250 acres under cultivation and work more hours per day than many men.

Nervous Prostration.

She has been taking Hood's Sarsaparilla for the past year and has never been as well as now.

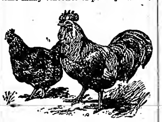
DORKINGS.

A Long Lived, Handsome and Profitable Breed.

The sketch printed below is copied from that excellent journal, The Poultry Monthly. It is made from a pencil drawing. It does not take a very critical eye to see in these Dorkings ideal form, massiveness and beautifully penciled plumage. Their deep, solid breasts, short legs, broad bodies and comparatively small bones show but little waste. It is not to be wondered that Dorkings make an attractive feature in the showroom.

Few breeds of fowls have stood their ground with so little change for so long a period as Dorkings, during which time many varieties of poultry have become greatly changed if not extinct. The greatest change has been merely in the selection of lighter colored birds of the simple Gray Dorkings and called Silver Grays, all other points having been left undisturbed for the last 50 years. But this does not apply to the variety called Colored Dorkings, seen in the illustration. These are bred darker than they were years ago, making the distinction between the two varieties more defined. Of course, since poultry shows have become popular, uniformity in markings, size, etc., has been more regarded. Dorkings are becoming more appreciated every year. More birds are shown at our exhibitions than in former times. There is no doubt they will be still more appreciated when better understood.



COLORED DORKINGS.

They do not stand confinement like the Asiatics, but with a fair run and proper care few birds can compare with them as layers, and they are par excellence for the table. They are a long lived breed, continuing their laying to an advanced age; they are also careful mothers, caring for their broods longer than most fowls.

MATING LIGHT BRAHMAS.

How to Enhance the Intensity and Beauty of Plumage.

The beauty of a Light Brahma is greatly enhanced by the intensity and brilliancy of the black in the hackles and tail. The tendency in breeding is toward a fading out of this color, the brilliant black becoming a dull rusty brown and sometimes disappearing altogether, as has been the case in the White Brahmas. I once selected a Light Brahma cockerel for a gentleman who had experienced great difficulty in preserving the beauty of the hackles in his birds. He declared it to be impossible to breed good hackles in his climate. His birds were otherwise very handsome ones, of large size and fine shape. The cockerel selected for him had a good stripe in his hackle and a deep darkly colored underfluff. I saw the pullets the next winter which had been bred from this male, and they had very handsome hackles, the stripe not only being of good length, but of a very brilliant black. But these dark underfluffed birds may breed some pullets with too much black in the back. Such pullets often make fine hens, for age tends to a loss of color.

To sum up, for males secure a cock with dark underfluff; for females, one with light underfluff, and in both cases mate to exhibition females. When the females are deficient in black, use a male, even for pullet breeding, with a dark underfluff.—B. Cook in American Agriculturist.

Early Broilers.

In raising broilers for market it is an item to have them ready early and to have them weigh about two pounds each. Both these points are necessary to the highest price, and as the cost is the same whether they are ready in good season or two or three weeks late the difference in price is all profit. An incubator is necessary, because the hens cannot be depended upon to sit during the early part of the winter, and at this season it is less trouble to manage a good incubator that can be depended upon to hatch a good per cent of 200 or 300 eggs at one time than to look after a dozen sitting hens. Then, when the chickens are hatched, they can be looked after with much less trouble and with less risk of loss in a brooder than with ten or a dozen hens.

Size of Flocks and Pens.

On general principles the smaller the flock the greater the per cent of eggs, but of course there is a limit. Very much depends on the care given and the amount of work required of the hens. A pen 12 by 12 should be ample for 30 hens if kept clean and the supply of dry earth or chaff, or chopped straw ample to bury completely all food and keep the hens scratching. Some of our most successful poultrymen allow a building 12 by 20 to every 50 hens, and reap a rich harvest, but very much depends upon the man. The majority succeed best with flocks of 12 or 15 in pens 8 by 12. It seems easier to keep everything in order, and this must be done. —Maine Farmer.

To Poultry Beginners.

If you have a notion of beginning the poultry business, commence with a small flock and learn the ins and outs from the ground up. It is a mistake that there is nothing to learn in the successful handling of fowls; that any one without experience can start in the business wholesale at once and make it profitable. Many have tried it and failed. If you find that you can make a few hens pay you and you like the business, then enlarge the flock.

HENS AND COWS.

Careful Estimates of the Profits of Each Result In Favor of the Hen.

A good cow will cost $50. She will average during the year about two gallons of milk per day and about five pounds of butter per week. Two gallons per day for 365 days would be 730 gallons per year, which, at 25 cents per gallon, would be $146 per year for milk. Five pounds of butter per week for 52 weeks would be 260 pounds per year, which, at 20 cents per pound, would be $52 per year for butter. The cow would raise a calf, which at weaning time would be worth about $10. So that the receipts from the cow would amount to $208, from which must be subtracted the expense of keeping, which would be about $1 a week, or $52 per year. We then have $150 profit from our $50 investment in the cow.

We will now invest $50 in chickens, and for this amount can be bought 100 good hens. The average egg production of a hen is about 125 per year. We then have from 100 hens 12,500 eggs, or 1,041½ dozen eggs per year, which, at an average of 17½ cents per dozen, would be $182.25. Each hen will raise on an average ten chickens per year, which will make 1,000 chicks raised from 100 hens, and at 10 weeks old will be worth 25 cents each, or $250 for the 1,000 chicks; this added to the $182.25 for eggs, and we have $432.25, from which subtract the expense of keeping, which will amount to $75 per year for the 100 hens, and 12½ cents each for the 1,000 chicks ten weeks, would be $125, or a total expense of $200 per year, which, taken from the gross income, will leave $232 profit, which leaves a balance of $60 in favor of our $50 investment in hens.

SMALL TURKEYS.

Why They Are Best For Early Markets and Cold Climates.

An experience of over 20 years raising turkeys, says a Vermont farmer, enables me to state positively that the medium sized bird is the one that can be raised here with the greatest profit. And what is true of Vermont is true of all sections of the country that have long cold winters and late springs. As a rule, turkeys commence to lay in Vermont during the latter part of March. Even if they commence earlier it is not safe to hatch the youngsters before the 20th of May, and there are more hatched in June every year than in May. This gives the young turks 5½ to 6 months in which to get their growth and become fat enough for the Thanksgiving market. A flock of Narragansetts at this time, if they have been properly cared for, will dress from 10 to 12 pounds, according to the proportion of hens and toms, and will look plump and clean, not pinfeathery.

The Thanksgiving market is to the turkey raiser what the early markets are to the broiler raisers. I have repeatedly known turkeys to sell in Boston the week before Thanksgiving at 20 to 23 cents, while the week after they would drop 5 to 8 cents per pound and stay there. It doesn't need a magnifying glass to see the point. The Narragansetts or even the common turkey will bring in more dollars at Thanksgiving at the prices which rule then than their Mammoth brethren will one or two months later at the price which rules at that time.

Poultry Notes.

Pullets are not good breeders.

Plumage, symmetry and so on depend on the sire.

Observe which hens are the best layers and breed from them.

Give fowls all the range and exercise that the weather will permit this cold weather.

An eastern exchange says: "Eggs are shipped to New York from Belgium. They are packed in flat boxes, filled in with cut straw. The boxes hold from 60 to 80 dozen each. The loss by breakage is about the same as those shipped from the west in barrels. Freight averages from 1⅛ cents to 2 cents per dozen, while their prices range with those for western stock."

No "condition powders," no medicine, no patent "egg food," no "nothing" but the same common sense applied to the hen as to the cow.

It is the mother that influences the internal qualities. A good layer, if mated in the right way, will impress this desirable quality upon her progeny.

The roosters are like the drone in a hive—useless, except for the purpose of procreation. Hens will lay better and the eggs will keep better without them.

It is an important item when the hens are closely confined, as is often necessary during the winter, to see that the food and water are kept clear of filth.

In selecting a male bird for breeding take one that is bold and lively in disposition, glossy in plumage, form well developed, broad, full breast, muscular thighs and legs set well apart.

Hens eat considerable grass during the summer, and something of a like nature should be provided for them in winter.

Put straw in the roosting places of the ducks and geese. It will help keep them warm. Change it often enough to keep clean.

One of the best ways of keeping the hens at work this cold weather is to feed the grain among litter and let them scratch it out.

If the hens are laying well in winter, they must have lime in some form. Give them crushed oyster shells, old plaster or bonemeal.

Yellow corn gives a yellow tinge to the flesh of dressed poultry. Wheat and buckwheat whiten it. Feed according to the demands of your market.

A Pekin duck lays from 120 to 150 eggs in a year, and it is not hard to make a pair of young Pekins weigh 10 pounds when 10 weeks old. They are a profitable fowl.

MARKED DOGS' EYES.

An Explanation Wanted of the Presence of These Tan Spots.

Can any of your readers explain the meaning of the tan spots seen so commonly over the eyes in black and tan dogs of most breeds?

When in Melbourne last year, I went carefully over all the dogs in a show with one of the stewards, and we found the spots in all the black and tan terriers, foxhounds, deerhounds, collies, lurchers, etc., but I could get no information regarding them from the experts.

In some of the highly bred toy dogs, as the small black and tan terriers, I found on inquiry that these spots, formerly so very conspicuous, were being bred out and had nearly disappeared. Their persistence through so many strongly marked varieties, except those of late date, is singular, for there is fairly good proof that when first domesticated the dog was red or brown, like the pariah, dingo, etc.

As far as I can see, we do not find the spots white on a black or dark ground, nor yet black or dark on a white or light ground. My explanation is that they have arisen as a permanent marking after the dogs "sported" to black under domestication and have been preserved and developed through natural selection. Possibly they are protective and simulate eyes.

One morning, just at dawn, I had occasion to go out into the garden, and while stooping to examine some flowers, near a fence partly covered with creepers, I suddenly saw an animal's head looking through, and what seemed to be two seemingly large and ferocious black eyes glared at me. Suspecting that a black leopard was about to spring over, I started back, clapped my hands and shouted. To my relief, however, I saw a tail wag and found that the spectator was a cooly's dog I knew very well and which recognized me. The use of the tan spots—in this case at least—then occurred to me.

May it not be that the spots thus serve a protective purpose and have often saved the lives of dogs (black dogs) from their enemies, the smaller felines, such as the clouded leopard, etc.? Perhaps the matter is not new, but if it is it seems worth looking into.

I have several dogs about here now with black bodies and heads. The tan spots, rather pale, are of the size of a shilling. I have shot one, keeping the skin of the head as a curiosity.—S. E. Peal in Nature.

COMPETITION IN BABIES.

Wherein a Word to a Wise Papa Ought to Be Sufficient.

"I am getting to be the most barefaced and versatile liar on earth," said the bachelor, "and it's all on account of two little innocent babies. Two of my friends at the office have recently been invested with the honor of paternity—both boys. Prouder papas you never saw. One of them, Jones, is an amateur photographer, and the other day he took a picture of his baby and brought it to the office.

"Of course you know how intelligent a child of one month looks," continued the bachelor, stroking his bald head with the air of a connoisseur in infancy, "but the boys in the office were loyal. They swore it was the brightest looking kid they had ever seen and that it was the image of Jones.

"If it had been any one else's child, Jones would have knocked somebody down for the insult, but he took it as a great compliment and stuck the picture up in a frame on his desk.

"This was too much for Smith—the other papa. He hasn't any camera of his own, so he got a young man who lives next door to come in and take his baby's picture, and he brought it down to the office as an opposition to Jones'. Really I'm sorry for Smith if his baby looks like that picture, but I rather think the amateur artist libeled the child and made it the monster it appears.

"The picture was not focused properly. It represents Smith in the background holding on his knee a mammoth infant nearly as big as he is. The baby's hands are outstretched toward the camera and look as though they might belong to Mr. Fitzsimmons or Mr. Corbett. Smith thought it was beautiful, and when some one suggested that the boy looked just exactly like him he ordered drinks all around and put the picture up on his desk as a further opposition to Jones'.

"Every time I come into the office I have to stop and admire those pictures, and I'm acquiring great self control by keeping a straight face whenever Jones or Smith says, 'And still you will remain a bachelor, will you?'"—New York Herald.

SURROUNDED BY MYSTERY!

A Great Mistake.

A recent discovery is that headache dizziness, dullness, confusion of the mind etc., are due to derangement of the nerve centers which supply the brain with nerve force; that indigestion, dyspepsia, neuralgia, wind in stomach, etc., arise from the derangement of the nerve centers supplying these organs with nerve fluid or force. This is likewise true of many diseases of the heart and lungs. The nerve system is like a telegraph system, as will be seen by the accompanying cut. The little white lines are the nerves which convey the nerve force from the nerve centers to every part of the body, just as the electric current is conveyed along the telegraph wires to every station, large or small. Ordinary physicians fail to regard this fact; instead of treating the nerve centers for the cause of the disorders arising therefrom they treat the part affected.

Franklin Miles, M. D., LL. B., the highly celebrated specialist and student of nervous diseases, and author of many noted treatises on the latter subject, long since realized the truth of the first statement, and his Restorative Nervine is prepared on that principle. Its success in curing all diseases arising from derangement of the nervous system is wonderful, as the thousands of unsolicited testimonials in possession of the company manufacturing the remedy amply prove.

Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine is a reliable remedy for all nervous diseases, such as headache, nervous debility, prostration, sleeplessness, dizziness, hysteria, sexual debility, St. Vitus dance, epilepsy, etc. It is sold by all druggists on a positive guarantee, or sent direct by the Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind., on receipt of price, $1 per bottle, six bottles for $5, express prepaid.

[From The Journal.

Geo. Kronschnable has purchased lots on the corner of Lincoln avenue and Mill street and will as soon as spring arrives commence the erection of a double store building, two stories high. It will be built of brick and will be one of the best blocks in town. Brown Duckstad has also completed arrangements to build and will commence work early in the spring. He will undoubtedly build of brick. E. B. Gustofson has about completed arrangements to build a new store building but is as yet undecided weather to build a brick or frame building. Hans Haukos has purchased lots and will put up a frame building early in the spring. A stock company will soon be organized with Mr. Fritz Barholz at the head for the purpose of building a new brick hotel, the plans of which have already been drawn. These with the numerous other buildings to be erected will make lively times in Fertile next summer and goes to prove that we have a live town here and one that is bound to become the banner town of the county.

The Common Cold.

Medical writers have recently called attention to the fact that the common cold, which most people suppose they "catch" by undue exposure, though they cannot, for the life of them tell how or when, is frequently the result of a debilitated condition of the body, and that the head-ache, catarrhal trouble, sore throat and other accompaniments of a cold are signs of an impure condition of the blood. This explanation is at least reasonable, and it is desirable that it should be understood, as it points to the proper and only method by which this uncomfortable and in many instances, dangerous condition may be avoided or overcome. It is not uncommon to hear people remark that they suffer constantly with "a cold" from early fall until the warm weather returns in the spring. This is undoubtedly due to the fact that the system is weakened, that it lacks vitality, is poorly nourished and can not resist the severer trials that come with the coming of fall and winter weather.

Of course the remedy for these ailments, and the preventive, if they have not already made their encroachments, consists in a course of treatment which will build up and strengthen the physical system. In the first place the blood must be purified and invigorated so that it can carry health and vitality to all the organs of the body, enabling the heart and lungs, the liver, bowels and skin to perform their proper functions. The digestive organs must then be stimulated and strengthened and made to do their part in supplying the wasted and much needed strength to the system.

For the work of purifying the blood and giving strength and vitality to the system, nothing has yet been found equal to Hood's Sarsaparilla. The burden of the testimonials from people who have taken Hood's Sarsaparilla is that it purifies their blood, removes pimples, boils and all similar eruptions, gives them an appetite and makes them feel strong. This is just what is needed to fortify the system against that condition for which people in general have no better name than a "cold." A few bottles of Hood's Sarsaparilla taken at this season would be sufficient to give that tone and stimulus to the organs of the body which are indispensable to health, especially in trying weather, and certainly, a few dollars expended now in taking measures to prevent sickness or even the discomforts of a long continued "cold" would be better than a fit of sickness and heavy doctor's bills later on. In buying medicine, as in buying anything else, it is well to see that you get an honest article, and such Hood's Sarsarilla is everywhere recognized to be.

Accept None of the Pretended Substitutes FOR Royal Baking Powder

BECAUSE inferior and cheaper made baking preparations are sold at wholesale at a price so much lower than ROYAL, some grocers are urging consumers to buy them in place of the ROYAL at the same retail price.

If you desire to try any of the pretended substitutes for ROYAL BAKING POWDER bear in mind that they are all made from cheaper and inferior ingredients, and are not so great in leavening strength nor of equal money value. Pay the price of the ROYAL BAKING POWDER for the ROYAL only.

It is still more important, however, that ROYAL BAKING POWDER is purer and more wholesome and makes better, finer, and more healthful food than any other baking powder or preparation.

A Piano at A Nominal Price.

Chicago's largest music house, Lyon & Healy, has moved into a magnificent building. They have a number of slightly used and second-hand pianos returned from World's Fair renting, etc. etc., which they have determined to sacrifice rather than to try to make room for. These instruments comprise Square pianos at $40, $65, $90, $100 and $125. Upright pianos at $125, $140, $150, $165, $190, $200, $225, $240 and upward. Grand pianos at $200, $250, $300 and upward. Nearly all originally sold for from two to four times their present price. Almost all prominent makes (in squares and uprights) are represented, including among numerous others Chickering, Knabe, Steinway, Weber, Decker, Steck, Fisher, etc. This is an opportunity that will not occur again, as Lyon & Healy have not moved for twenty years. Immediate attention is therefore necessary. A good plan would be to order a piano, leaving the selection to Lyon & Healy. However, they will send a list and full particulars upon application. Any piano not proving satisfactory may be returned at their expense. Address at their new salesrooms, corner Wabash avenue and Adams street, Chicago. Distance is no obstacle in taking advantage of this remarkable chance to obtain a piano, for in proportion to the saving to be made the freight charges are insignificant. If you do not already know them by reputation any banker will assure you of Lyon & Healy,s entire responsibility and record of over a third of a century for honorable dealing. Write to-day so as to avoid disappointment.

Latest Novelties in Ladies' Materials.

Velvet is one of the most popular materials this winter. It is extensively introduced as trimming to give an additional artistic effect to the toilette. Cloaks and wraps are made of this fabric. One of the newest variety is moire velvet, which is chosen for carriage cloaks and those worn over evening dresses. Even richly repped silk have the sleeve of velvet, both in lengthwise and crosswise reps. Then come in the new bright colors: poncean red turquoise blue, mauve, cerise and from light to orange yellow. A novelty in woolen fabrics is woven in open squares in imitation of the perforated cloths and velvet. It is usually in large plaids, and the small open spaces are in the corners of the squares. The fabric is of solid colors, so that it may be effectively used above a constrasting color, as pale tan with open squares showing pink silk beneath; dark blue with cerise showing through, or black over green lining. No Fashion Magazines can furnish better and more reliable information on this subject than the popular McDowell Journals, coming as they do from the Fashion centre of the world. In price they range as follows: Both "La Mode de Paris" and "Paris Album of Fashion," $3.50 each for a year's subscription, or 35 cents a copy; "The French Dressmaker," $3.00 per annum, or 30 cts. a copy. As for "La Mode," a family paper of unusual merit, it costs only $1.50 a year, or 15 cents a copy. If you are unable to procure either of these journals from your newsdealer do not take any substitute from him, but apply by mail directly to Messrs. McDonald & Co., 4 West 14th Street, New York,

LIGHT FROM PLANTS.

ONCE BELIEVED TO BE PURE FANCY, BUT NOW KNOWN AS REAL.

rees and Bushes Which Produce Wonderful Luminous Effects--Some Experiences of Naturalists In Different Parts of the World.

One of the early naturalists, Mme. Ierian, I think, describes an extraordinary spectacle which she observed in sis. Her party was moving through forest at night when without warnıg a large light appeared. At first dim, increased in size, growing larger and arger until finally a tree was outlined a soft pulsating light.

The natives were demoralized and reased to approach it, saying it was the acred tree of fire. But the naturalist ad little faith in trees of fire and inestigated it, finding that the light was ue to certain insects, which, by the ay, has never been observed since.

That a tree or plant could give light as deemed a figure of the imagination, et today it is known that light giving lants are not uncommon and among the ıost striking and remarkable of natural phenomena. Once in returning from day's hunt through a deep forest in he heart of the Adirondack region I tumbled against a dead limb of a tree, hen to my amazement I was at once urrounded by a silvery light that flew a all directions, like darts and arrows f fire, each piece burning where it lay. his was an unusually brilliant display f the best known of luminous plants, he "fox fire," or "witches' glow" of hildhood days.

To the layman it is often mysterious, e investigation shows nothing but the ecayed wood, and sometimes a soft, ulpy mass. The botanist will soon oint out the light giver in the myceium of some fungus that has permeated he old branch and fairly taken possesion of it, converting it into a glorious pectacle when disturbed. The vividıess of the light may be estimated when t is known that print can often be read y it, and the light of some has been nown to penetrate through several hicknesses of paper.

Singular to say, the smallest plant is ften the means of producing the greatest uminous effects. This is the diatom, hich the naturalists of the Challenger und floating in the ocean in vast numrs, and as the nucleus of the diatom s often brilliantly phosphorescent some f the most remarkable displays of light bserved by the naturalists were occaioned by these little plants. But what hall we say to a sight observed by a Norwegian bark in the bay of Funchal? The waters here are fairly alive with hese little luminous plants the year ound, and on the occasion referred to waterspout formed among them. During the day it would have attracted litle attention, as the phenomenon is a ommon one, but the crew of the ship were suddenly confronted at night by a iteral pillar of fire or light that extendd upward to a distance seemingly of ,000 feet and moved along with a deided bend.

It emitted a pale yellow light that tood out in strong relief against the lack night, a weird and formidable pectacle, rushing on before the wind.

An English naturalist, wishing to asonish some natives in a wild part of Asia in which he was traveling and mpress them with his supernatural owers, secured a certain vine known as Euphorbia phosphorea, and rubbing it ipon a big rock caused the latter to gleam with flame and present so remarkable a spectacle that the natives an, believing that he had set the rock fire by simply touching it. The natualist was aware that the milky juice of his plant, that resembled the dandelin, was brilliantly phosphorescent.

In the Harz mountains there has been or ages a cave known as the haunted avern. An Englishman, traveling in he vicinity and hearing of it, deterained to investigate the mystery. After long climb he reached the cave. No ooner did complete darkness set in than he phantom of the cave appeared—a emarkable semblance to a human form, with arms outspread, outlined against he gloom. Making his way to the figre that had alarmed so many wayfarrs, he found that it was a plant that rew upon the wall. It was the well nown phosphorescent fungus, Rhizoıospha subterranea, frequently found n caves and familiar to miners. Its ight is often so vivid that people have ead by it.

These curious lights are not found in he tropics alone. Some years ago Mr. Iorrell, editor of the Gardiner (Me.) ournal, wrote me that he had observed brilliant steady light in his garden at imes, totally unaccounted for by mehanical contrivance, and which, upon nvestigation, proved to be the phoshorescent light emitted by the young f the plant Tianns stydticus.

Perhaps the most startling exhibition as observed several years ago by an nglish traveler in Borneo. Belated, he as overtaken by night, and there beng no moon he was fearful of losing is way, when, as the darkness came n, singular lights appeared here and here in the bushes and by the roadside. ome were yellow; others burned, or eemed to, with a bright greenish hue. s it grew darker the blaze of light inreased, and finally the traveler was mazed to find that he was passing hrough lines of luminous bush which mitted light so brilliant that he could ead by it.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

The Pompous Vizier.

"I recall the story of a sultan," said Dean Hole, "who had a very pompous vizier, and desiring to rid himself of the vizier sold him in open market for a slave. The market was not brisk that day, and the vizier brought only eightpence. The sultan bought him in at this price, and thereafter whenever the vizier became pompous the sultan had only to mention 'eightpence,' or draw the figure '8' in the air, when the pompous minister immediately subsided."

Whitaker's friends claim that he is certain of not less than 15 votes. The announcement of Whitaker's candidacy, simultaneous with the formal announcement of Floyd and Hutchinson, indicates a well planned movement to defeat Elkins. The friends of Elkins claim that they have enough votes pledged to defeat Whitaker.

MADISON, Wis., Jan. 8.—Governor W. H. Upham and other newly elected state officials were inaugurated with simple but impressive ceremonies in the presence of the largest crowd which ever attended such an event here. A special train brought Mayor Koch and a delegation of thirty city officials from Milwaukee. The state officials and ladies arrived on another special and were met by a committee and escorted to the capitol, where the oath was administered by Chief Justice Orton of the Wisconsin supreme court, each officer being presented by his predecessor. After the ceremony an informal reception was held by Governor Upham in the executive mansion. A grand reception closed the exercises.

His Case Reset for Jan. 21, When Hayward's Comes Up.

MINNEAPOLIS, Jan. 8.—Claus A. Blixt was brought over from the jail to be present when his case was reset, according to the agreement made at the time of arraignment of Hayward. Blixt looked much better than when last seen, and greeted his attorney with a smile as he stepped forward to shake hands. The conference lasted but a moment, however, and Blixt returned with Sheriff Ege almost immediately to jail. Hayward's defense, it is said, will be insanity.

HINDOO PROVERBS.

Bits of East Indian Philosophy Expressed In Pungent Epigrams.

A cluster of sarcastic Indian proverbs is given in the columns of the Madras Mail. However patient the common people of India may be, they give in their proverbs expression to their feelings and indulge freely in satire at the expense of those who trouble them. That the powerful should oppress the weak is no new thing in the history of any land, and in India it is expressed by the proverb, "Big fish eat little ones." A "Jack in office" suddenly raised to power, which he uses unwisely, is spoken of as "A water carrier reigns for two days and a half." The boaster who has failed in his plans is directed to "rub the arms of your brethren," a proverb the meaning of which does not appear on the surface. It refers to the custom of rubbing the arms of successful wrestlers as a mode of congratulation on the victory gained. The proud boaster is thus ironically told to congratulate others, not himself. The official who takes bribes is said to "wear silver spectacles." The miserly and mean are held in great contempt, and the proverbs regarding them are numerous. "Come to your funeral pyre; wood is cheap," is a satire on the man who fears to spend all that is needed on the necessaries of life.

A woman who is ready to quarrel, as the village woman of the lower orders too frequently is, finds herself rebuked in, "She quarrels with the passing breeze." The woman retorts by speaking of a quarrelsome husband as "better out than at home," and of the henpecked husband she says he is "a woman's kingdom." Affected politeness is described by, "During ceremonial observances the train went off." Two persons were going by train. One said to the other, "Sir, pray enter." "After you, sir." "No, you be pleased to go first." And away went the train and left the overpolite friend behind. When politeness passes into obsequiousness, it is said, "The mouth is not sweetened by saying 'sweetmeats.'" Housekeepers in England are familiar with the cat as a scapegoat. The monkey in India takes the place of the cat, and to the man who tries to conceal his fault it is said, "Accidents in the stable are laid on the monkey's head." "The Indian crow is proverbial for its cunning, which gives rise to the proverb, "This scheme will scare crows," and refers to the clever plans of a cunning man, able to outwit a crow. "A tongue under a tongue" fitly expresses the double tongued or false man.

A "DON'T" FOR BRUSH BOYS.

The Tailor Tells How the Coat Collar Is Quickly Ruined.

The most difficult thing to fit on a man is a coat collar, and it is the easiest thing to get out of shape, except perhaps the knees of the trousers. A tailor molds and shapes a collar with his hands and hot goose to conform with the measurements he has taken of the shape of an individual's shoulders, and it does not take a great deal of ill usage to destroy his work.

"The worst enemy a coat collar has," said the tailor, "is the colored boy who brushes your clothes in the barber shop, hotel or sleeping car. When he helps you on with your overcoat, he reaches under for your coattails, grasps the overcoat collar with the other hand and gives your undercoat two or three smart jerks, which pulls the collar down and away from the neck and bunches it on the shoulders, and the overcoat finishes the work of destroying its shape. This should never be allowed under any consideration.

"The proper way to keep the coat collar in place is to shrug your shoulders forward after you have put the coat on. The collar will then fall into place on your neck; the cloth will adjust itself to the shape of your shoulders and stay there. Don't pull the collar about, and don't, above all, allow the brush boy to pull your coat out of shape under the pretense of getting your overcoat on your shoulders."

Brush boys will please note.—Kansas City Star.

The battle of the Emperors was fought at Austerlitz, 1805. The emperors present were Napoleon, Francis of Austria and Alexander of Russia. Over 170,000 men were actually engaged in the battle, and of this number 28,000 were killed or wounded, or 18 per cent of the whole.

GOVERNOR'S MESSAGE

IMPORTANT MATTERS REFERRED TO THE STATE LEGISLATURE

Review of Pine Land Frauds, Better Laws Needed For Regulating Banks, and Trust Companies—Board of Arbitration Favored—Another Insane Hospital Necessary, Near or in the Twin Cities.

ST. PAUL, Jan. 9, 1895.

In his message to the legislature, Governor Nelson reviews the forest fire calamity Sept. 1 last, and explains that more than 400 lives were lost, 2,000 people were left homeless and $1,000,000 worth of property destroyed. The governor reports that voluntary contributions to the relief fund amounted to over $90,000, and in addition the relief commission borrowed $15,000 on their own account which the legislature will be asked to refund.

Under the country warehouse law of 1893 all interior elevators have taken out state licenses and are operated as public elevators subject to the supervision of the railroad and warehouse commissioners.

The governor asks for an annual appropriation of $5,000 to carry on the work of destroying chinchbugs, grasshoppers and other grain destroyers.

He explains that the state has 10,000 acres of land in the Itasca state park, and recommends that the state buy 8,000 acres more from private parties in order to control all the lands adjacent to Itasca lake for park purposes.

More liberal game and fish laws are recommended so that people may be allowed to take white fish in nets and other fish in a proper manner at all seasons of the year.

The world's fair board is praised for their ability and energy in representing Minnesota at the Columbian exposition.

The governor reports that the state capitol commission has purchased a site for the new building in St. Paul, four blocks west of the present building, the ground costing $265,000. The board will select a design for the new building and the governor believes that a new capitol is greatly needed.

The pine land investigation committee is warmly praised for their work, and the legislature is called upon to continue the investigation under ample facilities and with liberal funds.

The legislature is called upon to revise the law governing the sale of pine stumpage, and points out the great necessity of making it possible for the governor, auditor and state treasurer to find out the true condition of stumpage in different parts of the state. The legislature is called upon to provide protection to forests against fires.

The dairy and food commissioner is prosecuting his work energetically and is constantly seizing oleomargarine and other adulterated products.

The drainage work in the Red River valley is reported upon, showing that about 20 miles of ditching is completed, draining a large area of good land and making it tillable. More money for this purpose is needed, and the governor recommends that an appropriation be made for carrying on the work.

The state constitution provides for taking the state census during this year and the governor urges the legislature to appoint competent persons to take the census, not leaving the work to local assessors.

A mine inspection law is needed similar to the factory inspection law, and a board of arbitration is recommended to settle strikes and other trouble between capital and labor.

The governor believes the state bank examiner should have authority to close up banks, loans and trust companies or other financial institutions that are mismanaged or insolvent.

The school and university fund amounts to $10,712,119.

Nov. 20, 1894, the state treasury had to the credit of the several funds $1,898,544.58. The funded and unfunded debt of the state, less cash in the sinking redemption fund, amounted to $1,092,183.10, on Aug. 1, 1894. The governor recommends that the state tax levy shall not exceed 1.4 mills. The governor reports that binding twine made at the state prison in Stillwater is giving satisfaction to farmers, and that the price has been reduced to 33⅓ per cent below the price formerly charged by the twine trust. All but 150 convicts are regularly employed. The governor recommends that all restrictions relating to leasing of convicts be removed, and that the warden be allowed to lease any number of convicts, without limit of time, up to ten years.

The governor recommends building the northeastern wing of the insane hospital at Fergus Falls; also the administration building at the same place in order to provide more room for insane patients. The estimated cost of these improvements is $185,000. The governor also believes that a fourth insane hospital should be built in or near the Twin Cities.

The school for the feeble minded is overcrowded and should be enlarged, with a building for boys.

The state university now has 2,050 students. The unusual growth of the institution has caused a small deficiency in funds, and the governor recommends a special appropriation for university purposes. More buildings are needed, a gymnasium, mechanics art building, heating and lighting plant, laboratory of hygiene, addition to the dairy school, also boarding hall and dormitory at the school of agriculture, and the library needs more books, for which funds should be provided.

The estimated receipts for the fiscal years 1896 and 1897, on a basis of 1.5 mills tax levy, is for 1896, $2,346,000, and for 1897, $2,463,000.

Disbursements are estimated at $1,765,000 for 1896 and $2,025,000 for 1897.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

[From our regular Correspondent.]

WASHINGTON, JAN. 4, 1895.

General confusion, general distrust and general disaster are now contending for the control of the democratic majority in Congress and of the administration. Instead of returning from their holiday in a more united condition the democrats are, if such a thing be possible, wider apart on the financial question than they were when the recess adjournment was taken. Debate was resumed in the House on the currency bill without any idea of what is to be the outcome. The men who ought to be leaders of the democrats are in doubt not only as to what they ought to do, but also as to what following they will have should they decide upon what to attempt. Some are advising the holding of a caucus and others are saying that a caucus will only aggravate the existing division. Mr. Cleveland has intimated quite strongly that he has a mind to send a special message to Congress, pleading for some patriotic, non-partisan financial legislation, and his cabinet is understood to be divided as to the advisability of such course on his part.

The situation has not been improved by the apparently well-grounded rumor that Mr. J. Pierpont Morgan, a New York banker, had called upon Mr. Cleveland, as the representative of the syndicate of bankers which floated the last bond issue, and formally requested that Secretary Carlisle be dismissed from the head of the Treasury department on the ground that he had failed to keep faith with the bankers and that he lacks the capacity to successfully handle the financial affairs of this country. Of course no one expects this to result in the removal of Secretary Carlisle, but it has added another complication to a situation that was already entirely too much complicated.

Republicans in Congress had no hand in making the present financial muddle and they do not consider it their duty to take any part in clearing up matters. They are at present merely interested onlookers, waiting to see whether the democrats will be able to produce anything tangible out of the chaos now prevailing. At present although the Carlisle currency bill is nominally before the House for general debate there is no certainty that it may not without an hour's notice be succeeded by another bill of an entirely different nature. When the democrats have shown what sort of a bill they really intend to try to pass, if they ever do, the republicans will be ready to meet it with a definite declaration, something that is at present useless to make. Among the changes proposed to be made in the Carlisle currency bill is one for the issue of $500,000,000 in 2½ cent bonds to be used for the retirement of the greenbacks and Treasury notes. It is stated Mr. Cleveland has endorsed the idea, but he has not done so publicly.

Senator Mitchell, of Oregon, thinks it very doubtful whether the Carlisle currency bill can be forced through the House and says of its chance in the Senate: "I do not see how it could get through the Senate. The plans which have been presented so far are most satisfactory and will require a thorough discussion of the best method of remedying existing conditions before any bill can be formulated that will be satisfactory, and there isn't time for that." When asked whether there would be an extra session of Congress, the Senator said: "Not unless the democrats force it. The republicans will do nothing to delay action. We will not even fight against the appropriation for the execution of the income tax. We believe that the tax is odious and ought not to be enforced, but as the democrats have placed it upon the statute book, it may, perhaps, be a good thing to let the country see just how unpleasant it is. There will be speeches against it, but no factious opposition."

Representative Russell, of Conn., a republican member of the House committee on Banking and Currency, does not believe that the Treasury can get any relief from financial legislation, no matter what its nature, until the tariff has been rearranged on the lines of protection and a sufficient revenue provided to meet the needs of the government. He recognizes, as do most unprejudiced students of the financial situation, that those two bond issues would have been made even if no treasury notes or greenbacks had ever been presented for redemption in gold. In short, that while those bond issues were nominally made to replenish the gold reserve they were in reality made to meet the deficit caused by the new tariff law. As to the financial bill now before the House, Mr. Russell believes that the administration can force it through the House, but has his doubts about whether Mr. Cleveland will care to do so, now that he has had an opportunity to learn what the country thinks of it.

EUCLID, MINN., JAN. 8 1895.

Mr. Editor—will you be kind enough to allow me to make a proposition through your paper to the parties that displayed the ability of a low chicken thief that cut my horses' tails and manes off on Christmas night? Now if he has any claim against me I am ready to settle it with him in any way he wishes in day-light. I think it is time to call a halt to this notorious night-work and slander in our town. As to the parties that wrote that slanderous piece in the Tribune sometime ago and took the liberty to slander me, I wish to speak plainly, I think he's a friend of Wales, and of about the same character; for when he wrote it he lied, and I can prove it. I don't wish to have to fight for the privlege of living here, but, if I have to, I believe I have all that is necessary to do it and all the favor I ask of them is to come out like men.

Yours truly,
ROBERT CASMEY.

"Old, yet ever new, and simple and beautiful ever," sings the poet, in words which might well apply to Ayer's Sarsaparilla—the most efficient and scientific blood-purifying medicine ever offered to suffering humanity. Nothing but superior merit keeps it so long to the front.

The best anodyne and expectorant for the cure of colds, coughs, and all throat, lung and bronchial troubles, is undoubtedly, Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, the only specific for colds and coughs admitted on exhibition at the Chicago World's Fair.

The Message.

Not the governor's message, nor yet the president's message, but The Message, published by the Rev. R. H. Battey, gave its readers a handsome New Year's edition, well worthy a far more pretentious publication. It was filled with good things for its readers and enclosed in a beautiful colored cover, making a beautiful and valuable edition. Mr. Battey is making a valuable paper of the Message, devoted to church work on an undenominational basis, and well deserves greater encouragement. He tells us that the list is growing very encouragingly and this is as it should be, as he is doing faithful, conscientious work on the Message. Everybody interested in building up the highest interests of this new Northwest should be a subscriber to the Message. We will send it and the JOURNAL for $1.50 a year.

NOW IT IS AUSTRIA.

MORE KICKS ARE MADE ON THE SUGAR SCHEDULE.

The Tariff War With European Countries Is Reaching an Acute Stage and Something Must Be Done—France Said to Also Be Getting Ready to Retaliate.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 5.—The tariff war between the United States and Europe has reached an acute phase. As foreshadowed in the Associated Press dispatches last week, the very first official act of Mr. Henglemueller, the new Austrian minister, was the lodgment of a protest against that paragraph for a sugar schedule act which imposes an additional duty of one-tenth of a cent on sugar coming to the United States from countries which pay an export bounty on it. This action was taken during the day and the ground taken by the minister was similar to that which formed the basis of the protest of Germany—that additional duty paid and is consequently a violation of the treaty of commerce with that nation. So far no threat of retaliation accompanied the protest, but in this Mr. Henglemueller is but following the example set by the German minister, and the next step will undoubtedly be in the same direction, namely, the imposition of some restriction upon an American product that is imported in quantities into Austria.

Discriminates Against Austria

The four great sources of our sugar supply, outside of the small proportion contributed by Louisiana, are Cuba, Germany, France and Austria. With three of these countries we are already and in the case of France there are already indications of the adoption of a retaliatory policy in the imposition of restrictions upon our meat trade and the importation of American wheat and flour. This whole subject was under discussion by the cabinet, and as far as can be gathered the outcome, if congress fails to come to the relief of the executive by the removal of the duty which is supposed to cause the trouble, then resort must be had to retaliation, which will either open European countries to our exports or close our own ports to all European products.

CLOSES EUROPEAN MARKETS.

Great Britain the Only Country Now Receiving Our Beef.

CHICAGO, Jan. 4.—Nelson Morris has received a cablegram from his agent at Antwerp that the Belgian government has prohibited the importation of live cattle from the United States on the ground that pleuro-pneumonia is prevalent in this country. This closes all the ports of continental Europe against American cattle and beef products, and leaves the exporter only the British market, which in its present condition is not a desirable one. This is in addition to the embargo on dressed beef and packed goods, which has been in force in most of the European countries for some time.

According to Mr. Morris, Belgium is merely following the lead of Austria, Germany, France and other European nations in taking retaliatory measures against the United States for the abolition of the reciprocity treaty, under which their sugar industry prospered.

OUTLET FOR OUR FLOUR.

An Unexpected Demand Comes From the Chinese Empire.

MINNEAPOLIS, Jan. 4.—Samuel Hill has returned from an extended trip to the Pacific coast. He reports business in Montana as prosperous. He says that at Spokane all the flour mills are running night and day on orders from China. This is an interesting fact, as it is a new outlet for American flour. China has heretofore subsisted on rice almost exclusively. Flour is now being used in small quantities as a substitute. If the demand should grow in any preceptible degree the population of China being so very large, it would soon become a very important factor in the demand for the American cereal.

ASYLUM DESTROYED.

Greater Portion of the Hospital at Anna, Ills., Devoured by Flames.

ANNA, Ills., Jan. 4.—Fire broke out at 1 o'clock a. m. in the roof of the center building of the group of three great buildings of the insane asylum in this city and spread with great rapidity. The building contained nearly 600 patients, all of whom escaped. None of the attendants or patients had time to secure their clothing, and the snow worked great hardship in transferring the patients to other quarters. The loss will exceed $300,000. The center buildings and south wing are completely destroyed.

Influenza in New York Again.

NEW YORK, Jan. 8.—The grip is once more giving New York doctors insomnia. Dr. John H. Gardner, who has made a study of the disease, said: "Yes, it is back again, as many of my patients can certify, but it is not nearly so serious as it was the first year it came. Doctors have decided that it is caused by a germ, but the germ is not yet identified."

Mayor Strong Will Investigate.

NEW YORK, Jan. 5.—Mayor Strong gave out the statement that he would have an investigation of all departments of the city government made through the commissioners of accounts. Said the mayor: "If there are abuses or corruption in the city departments I want to know it. The work will begin as soon as the commissioners can get their office force running smoothly."

TACOMA, Wash., Jan. 5.—The Northern Pacific has its wires working as far as Winlock, on the Portland branch, and is operating trains between that city and Portland without wires. Over 100 men are at work putting up railroad and Western Union wires between Winlock and Portland.

TREASURER'S FATE.

BARRETT SCOTT PROBABLY SWINGING IN AIR.

Captured by a Mob at Midnight and Spirited Away—Supposed to have been Hung by Incensed Farmers—A North Dakota Boy Confesses to Being a Hired Assassin.

O'NEILL, Neb., Jan. 4.—The famous embezzlement case of Barrett Scott, defaulting treasurer of Holt county, culminated in what is believed here to be the lynching of Scott by vigilantes of the northern part of the county. He was captured at midnight in a lonely part of the county, north of this city. He was returning with his wife, baby, hired man, John Schmidt, and a Miss McWharter from a trip to relatives about 18 miles from O'Neill, when six masked men sprang from the roadside, where they had been concealed, and, covering the carriage with Winchesters, ordered Scott to surrender. Scott seized the reins and attempted to drive over the men. The masked men then shooting Scott in the neck and wounding Miss McWharter, though not seriously. The first party was then joined by a larger force, which had been placed across the road further on to intercept the carriage had it escaped the first volley.

Scott and Schmidt were taken from the vehicle, blindfolded and thrown into a wagon and the ladies were told to go on. Schmidt has since returned. He had been taken to a sodhouse in the northwest part of the county with Scott. Schmidt was released, with the injunction to Get Out of the Country.

It is believed that Scott has been hanged, as the farmers of the county are terribly incensed over his work.

Scott's defalcation as county treasurer of Holt county, his flight to Mexico, his subsequent arrest, the strong fight made against his extradition, his return in irons, incarceration, trial, conviction, sentence, appeal and release on bonds two weeks ago have been told at length from time to time since a year ago last ago last August, when the discovery of his criminality was first made public.

WAS IT A BLIND?

An Embezzler's Smooth Scheme to Save His Bondsmen.

SIOUX CITY, Ia., Jan. 5.—Officers from O'Neil, Neb., are here looking for Bartlett Scott, the embezzling county treasurer supposed to have been captured by a mob and lynched on Monday. They say they have no faith in the lynching story.

Scott was convicted and sentenced to five years in prison. He was out under a heavy bond, and it is their theory that his abductors were his friends. They think the job was put up to get him out of the country and at the same time make it appear that he was lynched, so as to relieve his bondsmen.

At last reports no trace of him had been found, although the entire country around O'Neil has been scoured in the past two days.

FOUND IN A WELL.

The Body of Scott, the Missing Nebraskan, Is Discovered.

O'NEILL, Neb., Jan. 6.—The searchers for Scott's body think they found it at the bottom of an old well near the scene of the lynching. It could not be raised, but clothing was found in the well, and the body is believed to be there. It was long before daybreak when the searching party that was organized at the mass meeting assembled on the courthouse square. They were divided into detachments and each selected a leader. Fully 50 men were in the party and nearly as many more were unable to go on account of the lack of conveyances. They arrived at he scene of the shooting as soon as it was light enough to begin the search.

Scott's Body Not There.

LINCOLN, Neb., Jan. 8.—The search at O'Neill has resulted in the discovery that the old well supposed to contain Scott's body was empty.

KENT'S EXECUTION.

It Will Take Place Feb. 23, at Mandan, North Dakota.

MANDAN, N. D., Jan. 7.—In the district court, Judge Winchester denied a motion for a new trial in the Kent murder case, and State's Attorney Voss moved for the sentence of the defendant. A motion for arrest of judgment was made by defendant's counsel, which motion was denied. The defendant then made a statement protesting his innocence. He was sentenced to be hung Feb. 23.

MINISTER DENBY'S OPINION.

Peace Negotions Between China and Japan Will Be Fruitless.

LONDON, Jan. 6.—A dispatch to The Times from Pekin says that the Chinese envoy to negotiate for peace with Japan had a farewell audience with the emperor on Friday. Japan refuses to grant an armistice. Mr. Denby, the American minister, believes that the negotiations will be fruitless. The Japanese will withhold their terms for peace until they shall have occupied Pekin. Japanese landing parties are busy exploring the bays on the east coast of the province of Shang-Tung.

Another Fistic Fatality.

My Wife is Nervous

Says many a man and too often he is inclined to blame the poor, tired woman who cannot eat or sleep, whose whole life is filled with misery because her blood has become impoverished and her nervous system exhausted. She needs a building up medicine like Hood's Sarsaparilla. A few bottles will enrich and vitalize her blood, tone and strengthen her digestive organs, give her a good appetite, enable her to sleep soundly, banish her nervousness and bring back her smiles. Mr. J. W. Roberson, of Greenfield, Tenn., says: "My wife began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla about three months ago and she is now taking her third bottle. She has been in poor health for fifteen years. Hood's Sarsaparilla is doing her more good than any other medicine she has ever taken. Her appetite is better, she looks better and there has been improvement in every way."

WOMEN AT ATLANTA.

THE SUFFRAGE ASSOCIATION WILL CONVENE THERE THIS YEAR.

Though the Movement Seems to Have Gained Ground In Certain Quarters, No Stars Have Been Added to the Suffrage Flag Since the Last Convention.

The convention of the National Woman's Suffrage association to be held in Atlanta from Jan. 31 to Feb. 5 will be not untinged with sadness. The delegates will be happy indeed in meeting together again and will have some progress to report, but their happiness will be somewhat tempered by the fact that much less of progress has been made since the last convention than was expected, for no new stars have been added to the suffrage flag. The voters of Kansas rejected the equal suffrage proposition, and the constitutional convention of New York declared against even submitting it to the people. What is worse, it is feared in some quarters that the action in New York was more than merely negative. It was of such a nature as to perhaps delay all possibility of the suffragists winning in the Empire State for yet another term of years.

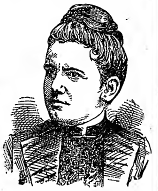
On the other hand, the record of the year just past is not altogether disheartening. The right to vote was generally exercised for the first time at the last election by the women of Colorado, and, according to the reports, with as much intelligence at least as that displayed by the men. In Illinois also the women voted for the first time, though only for one state officer, and as intelligently as did their sisters of full suffrage privileges in Wyoming and Colorado, and wherever they are entitled to a voice in school matters women have turned out in force during the past year at the polls. Miss Anthony, Mrs Stanton, Mrs. Blake and the remainder of the old guard, who will meet at Atlanta this year, will therefore be able to congratulate one another because some forward steps have been taken.

It is doubtful if even Miss Anthony dreamed, when, as a young girl, she stood up, more than 40 years ago, on the floor of the New York State Teachers' association convention at Rochester and demanded for the women of that gathering the right to take part in its deliberations, that she would live to see women in possession of equal citizenship anywhere. But there is no doubt that when Wyoming conferred the suffrage on women she looked for a rapid spread of the same liberal policy throughout the United States. The hopelessness of the case apparent in her youth had then changed to rose colored prospects of success, though subsequent events have not fully justified her anticipations, and the great majority of the states are as they were twoscore years ago—the men only are citizens and women are not yet admitted to voting privileges.

It has been Miss Anthony's chief hope, during the last decade and a half, that she might live to witness the conferring of the suffrage upon the women of her own state, New York. In 1880 it seemed to her and her coworkers that the hour of their victory was nigh, for they had the promise of a majority of the votes in the assembly for the suffrage measure then up. But the promises were not fulfilled and after 1880 it was not until 1894 that Miss Anthony again became hopeful. It did seem to her, however, during last spring and the early part of the following summer that there were grounds for believing the end to be in sight, as for the first time in the history of the movement that conservative element, the society woman, took up the cause.

No one who reads the newspapers will forget the delighted surprise with which the veteran suffragists welcomed the fashionable sistarhood to their ranks nor how tactfully and often at great violence to their own personal preferences these same veterans left the conduct of the campaign in the city of New York and other Empire State towns to the society women. It is undoubtedly true that the suffragists in New York, both the old hands and the raw recruits, confidently expected success in the constitutional convention in spite of the counter meeting held by some women who did not want to vote. The convention had only to give the word for the submission of the matter to the people at the fall elections, and it was believed that President Joseph Choate, the cultured and brilliant leader of the New York bar, would throw his immense influence on the suffrage side of the balance. But, alas and alack! shortly after the opening of the convention Mr. Choate expressed himself as decidedly against woman suffrage, and a substantial majority of the delegates followed his lead, defeating the proposition, so far as a constitutional amendment is concerned, for another 20 years. In spite of the fact that she is yet vigorous in mind and spirit for one of her years, Susan B. Anthony can hardly hope to live to see another constitutional convention in the state of New York.

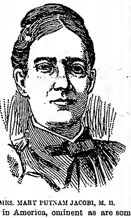


REV. ANNA HOWARD SHAW, D. D.

One of the most interesting of the many bright and clever women to be present at the Atlanta convention is the Rev. Anna Howard Shaw, D. D., of Philadelphia. Dr. Shaw is almost exactly such a woman in real life as was prefigured in fiction by "George Eliot" when she portrayed Dinah, the woman preacher, one of the characters in "Adam Bede." Like Dinah, Dr. Shaw gave up friends and the pleasures of this world for the pulpit, and she has had a very successful career in the clerical profession. She is a woman of wide and deep culture, for when she was graduated by the Boston university some years ago she received diplomas not only from the theological department, but also from the departments of law and medicine as well. Two years ago this month she was a guest at the dinner of the "Pilgrim Mothers" in New York and then and there replied to one of the toasts in a manner that captivated her cultivated fellow diners. She is "vice president at large" of the association and a fine specimen of the best type of the younger "new women."

Of course Mrs. Stanton, Mrs. Blake, Mrs. Ellen Battle Dietrick, Miss Alice Stone Blackwell, Mrs. Harriet Taylor Upton, Mrs. Rachel Forster Avery, Mrs. Josephine K. Heney, and most of the others who have born the brunt of the battle, lo, these many years will also be present, and from Kansas there should be a delegation of very respectable numbers, for it is understood that the women there mean to continue the fight with all vigor. Wyoming and Colorado should not be less forward, but it is possible that, having won the battle for themselves, the women of those two states may stay away.

It would be strange, however, if the convention should meet without Dr. Mary Putnam Jacobi of New York, who gives as the reason for being a suffragist that she "has a logical mind." Dr. Jacobi is past 50, is sometimes spoken of as more abrupt than suave in her speech and manner, and for many years has been the best known woman physician in America, eminent as are some of her sisters who have devoted their lives and talents to the healing art. During the sessions of New York's constitutional convention last year she labored with great persistence before that body and made one address upon its floor that won general attention, even from her opponents, as a well reasoned argument and one in which misrepresentation and extravagant statements had no place. Although she is an American in the best sense of the term, she is not a native of this country, having been born in London. Her father, however, was George P. Putnam, the American publisher. She came to the United States early in life and when but a young girl entered the Woman's Medical college in Philadelphia. After her graduation there, she studied at the College of Pharmacy in New York, being the first woman graduated, and then went to Paris, where she managed to secure admission to the medical schools of the French capital, after much opposition, and only because she was heartily indorsed by United States Minister Washburn. Her valedictory thesis, delivered upon graduation, in 1871 won great commendation, and for it she received a silver medal while various other honors were showered upon her.



MRS. MARY PUTNAM JACOBI, M. D.

Her husband, Dr. Abraham Jacobi, was a German political refugee, settled in New York, where they were married in 1873. He is now a man of great eminence in his profession, as is shown by the fact that he was chosen to head the American delegation to the recent international medical congress.

If the speeches made at the last dinner of the Pilgrim Mothers in New York be an indication of the feeling on the part of the suffragists toward Joseph Choate, that gentleman will probably be handled without gloves at Atlanta. Nearly every speaker referred to Mr. Choate in a more or less sarcastic or critical manner, and Mrs. Stanton went so far as to recite some disparaging rhymes about him and his action as president of the convention. Naturally among the chief features of the work to be done at the coming convention will be the laying out of a future programme, and if it is possible to devise any scheme for making the year 1895 and those that follow interesting to Mr. Choate it will no doubt be brought forward and indorsed.

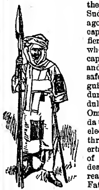
A SLAVE OF THE MAHDISTS.

Escape of Father Rossignoli, Who Was Captured When General Gordon Fell.

Father Rossignoli, a Jesuit missionary who was captured by the forces of the mahdi in the Sudan ten years ago, recently escaped from the fierce dervishes who held him captive so long and is now in safety. He was guided from Omdurman by Abdulla Mohammed Omar of the Absda tribe and traveled for months through the deserts in daily fear of recapture and death before he reached Cairo. Father Rossignoli was captured about the time that Chinese Gordon, then governor general of the equator under the khedive of Egypt, went to Khartum alone after the destruction of Hicks' army by the mahdi's forces and assumed command of the Egyptian army. Although Gordon saw death staring him in the face, he concluded to hold Khartum to the bitter end and did so. After a siege of 317 days, and when an English army was almost at hand, the mahdi's forces carried the city by assault on Jan. 26, 1885, and some 4,000 people, including Gordon himself, were massacred.



ROSSIGNOLI IN SUDANESE COSTUME.

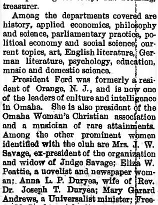
Father Rossignoli was taken to Omdurman by the mahdists and made a slave. After years of drudgery and cruel treatment Major F. R. Wingate of the British army learned of his whereabouts and sent Abdulla to assist him to escape from the hostile mahdists. Major Wingate is famous for this sort of humane work. In 1892 he effected the escape of three other captives, two nuns and Father Obrwalder. He is an Arabic scholar and usually has little difficulty in finding a native who for a consideration will attempt the rescue of a mahdist captive. A different guide must be employed each time, for once he has effected the escape of a prisoner he would forfeit his life if he returned to the Sudan. The fate of several other Europeans who were captured before and after the fall of Khartum has never been learned, and they are doubtless still held as slaves by the mahdists.

THE OMAHA WOMAN'S CLUB.

It Is Ending the Century In a Blaze of Intellectual Glory.

"Touching life with upward impulse" is the motto of the Omaha Woman's club, one of the most wide awake, progressive and well attended organizations of women in the United States. It was founded in May, 1893, and at the end of a year over 350 bright and brainy Omaha women had become members and were preparing to end the century in a blaze of intellectual glory. There are now 450 members, and as applications are constantly pouring in the 500 mark will doubtless be passed before the second anniversary of the organization is celebrated in May, 1895. The educational work of the club is conducted by departments, to at least one of which every member must belong. Each department chooses its chairman and has weekly or bimonthly meetings. The general meetings of the club are held every two weeks, and the literary programme of the session is carried out by some department designated for the purpose.

The present officers of the club are the following named: Frances M. Ford, president; Elizabeth J. Lindsey, first vice president; Jennie E. Keysor, second vice president; Adelaide W. Cross, recording secretary; Harriet H. Hellar, corresponding secretary; Ida Fleming, treasurer.



MRS. FRANCES FORD.

Among the departments covered are history, applied economics, philosophy and science, parliamentary practice, political economy and social science, current topics, art, English literature, German literature, psychology, education, music and domestic science.

President Ford was formerly a resident of Orange, N. J., and is now one of the leaders of culture and intelligence in Omaha. She is also president of the Omaha Woman's Christian association and a musician of rare attainments. Among the other prominent women identified with the club are Mrs. J. W. Savage, ex-president of the organization and widow of Judge Savage; Eliza W. Peattie, a novelist and newspaper woman; Anna L. P. Duryea, wife of Rev. Dr. Joseph T. Duryea; Mary Garard Andrews, a Universalist minister; Freeda M. Lankton, a leading Omaha physician; Julia M. C. Hooker, a local druggist; Grace B. Sudeborough, principal of the Teachers' Training school, and Dr. Augusta J. Chapin, pastor of the First Universalist church. The club is taking a strong interest in the moral and educational affairs of Omaha, and one department is waging warfare against the disorderly houses of the city.

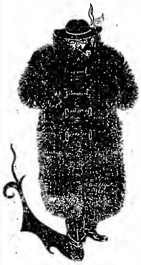
ECCENTRIC KIPLING.

BRATTLEBORO HARDLY KNOWS WHAT TO MAKE OF HIM.

He Wears Old Clothes, Smokes a Pipe, Hates Interviewers and Calls People Who Offend Him "Driveling Idiots." His Odd Home on a Vermont Hill.

The modern romancer is often a man without a country. Robert Louis Stevenson, a Scotchman, recently died in Samoa, his adopted home. Bret Harte, the prince of American story tellers, has resided for years in London, and Kipling, born in India and educated in England, makes the United States his home. Kipling married an American girl, Miss Carolyn Balestier of Brattleboro, Vt., and their home is located on a hill four miles from Brattleboro. Mrs. Kipling is the daughter of J. N. Balestier, at one time a Chicago lawyer and later a large real estate owner in New York. One of her brothers, the late Wolcott Balestier, was an intimate friend of Mr. Kipling and collaborated with him in writing "The Naulakha."

Miss Balestier became Mrs. Kipling in January, 1892, and the young couple have since made Brattleboro their home. They erected an odd looking house in Dummerston, a little place beyond the Brattleboro line. The house is 90 feet long and about 25 feet wide, and its foundation is of unfinished stone. There is but one tier of 11 rooms, all of which face the highway at the east and are entered by a long hall that runs the entire length of the building on the west side. Looking at the house from the highway, one wonders if Kipling, in his dread of the interviewer and the curious public, has built a house without a door, for no means of entering the strange looking residence are to be seen. There is a door, however, but it is at the rear of the house well concealed from view. At the southern end of the house is a double porch, from which may be obtained a magnificent view of the New Hampshire hills and the Connecticut valley. Kipling's study is located at this end of the house.



KIPLING ON A COLD DAY.

Kipling has caused a deal of local gossip since he located near Brattleboro, and the stories describing his eccentricities would fill a volume. He has very pronounced views on a great many subjects, but he reserves his strongest language for newspaper men. It is said that it is about as difficult to interview the Anglo-Indian novelist as it is to get President Cleveland to talk to a reporter for publication. If a reporter accosts him on the highway, he terms the incident an outrageous assault and takes to his heels. If eccentricity makes genius, Kipling is a genius of the first magnitude. For many years a seeker of fame and public attention, he now assumes the attitude of a shy and shrinking literary recluse whose motto is, "The public be something or othered!" His aversion to reporters seems rather strange, too, when it is remembered that in India he was a newspaper man himself.

About the first thing Kipling did in a literary way after he arrived in Brattleboro was to write a story in which a town suspiciously like Brattleboro in certain respects was held up to ridicule. This did not make the people love him, but it made them talk, and Kipling enjoys making people talk, provided they do not talk to him. One of the sights of the town is to see him strolling along the streets, with his English pipe clutched between his teeth and an expression of unconquerable determination written upon every feature. He is anything but a dandy. He is fond of old clothes and affects a rusty sombrero that has seen better days and many of them. On cold days he goes abroad in a big fur coat and looks more like a Russian nihilist than an Indian novelist.

Like most Englishmen of means, however, Kipling usually dresses for dinner and appears at the table clad in the conventional dress suit of polite society. When he first made Brattleboro his home, he rather snubbed the society that sought him, but he has since become less exclusive, and he has a number of friends outside of the Balestier family, who picture him as a most companionable man and an entertaining, hospitable host. "Begad" and "damn" are two of his favorite words, and any one who offends him is usually referred to as "that driveling idiot." He is very fond of children, and his baby, which is now about 2 years old, is monarch of all she surveys. He likes Vermont and declares that there is nothing like Vermont air for babies.

In his relations with the humble members of society Kipling is inclined to be very democratic. He scrapes an acquaintance with numerous odd characters he meets, and it is said he created somewhat of a sensation in Brattleboro one day by stopping a Chinaman on the street and conversing with him in Chinese for half an hour.

The withdrawal from the race for the speakership of John L. Gibbs late last week, settled the question in favor of comrade S. R. Van Sant, who had a walk-away from that time on, although Dan Shell kept up a pretense of running.

The senatorial question looms up in great shape since Gov. Nelson took an active hand. He has a knack of waking things up when he goes into a campaign. The other fellows will have to watch out pretty lively in order to keep up with the procession.

It strikes us that Senator Washburn seems to need a good deal of bolstering up for a man who has been such a faithful public servant as the Minneapolis papers insist that he has. To them it seems necessary to kill off Nelson, politically, in order to build up Washburn.

The Minneapolis papers will have to bring out some different kind of argument from what they have been using to convince the people that Knute Nelson is a knave. So far they have depended wholly upon democratic "arguments"—personal abuse.

The governor will make it warm work for Mr. Washburn's fool friends and they will find out before they get through with him that they have waked up the wrong passenger and will wish they had let him alone. The governor is a good deal of a fighter himself and dont like to have everybody walking all over his face promiscous like.

The divisionists are bound to take time by the foretop so they have filed petitions with the secretary of state for division of Polk county into five parts. If the thing ever gets as far as a vote it will be left worse than the other was. Next time there will not be as many votes in favor of division, through a misapprehension of the way to vote on the question.

Ex-Gov. W. R. Merriam has been accused of having a big hand in the effort to down Washburn. In an interview one day this week Merriam emphatically denies having anything whatever to do with it and avers that he stands right where he did last fall, when he said that Washburn was a good senator and should be re-elected. It is said that when William made that remark he winked the other eye. The best way to find out what he means is to ascertain in which direction his political interests lie.

The Minneapolis papers have suddenly discovered that Knute Nelson is a "political renegade" who should be unceremoniously relegated to innocuous desuetude. It does seem a trifle funny that they have for years and years informed their readers of the merits of "the honest little Norwegian" and now when he takes the field in opposition to their pet wishes he is "a terribly dishonest fellow, a political trickster!" If their assertions are correct it is wonderful how well Knute Nelson has succeeded in fooling all of the people all of the time for these years and years. We suspect that Mr. Nelson has smoked out one of their own political schemes, has put his foot down hard upon it, and—hence these tears.

The announcement made last week by Gov. Nelson that he would be a candidate for United States senator fell like a bomb-shell in the Washburn camp—and they haven't yet got over asking themselves, "where are we at?" They seem to act upon the presumption that because Mr. Washburn has been a good, faithful public servant, he should be kept in that position right along and no one else has a right to aspire to it as long as Minneapolis wants it for W. D. Some of his fool friends in Minneapolis have been brow-beating and bull-dozing Gov. Nelson in mortal terror, for fear that he should take the field, and last week the Minneapolis Tribune came out in an abusive article charging the governor with duplicity and underhand dealing in trying to undermine Gen. Washburn — as though he had a patent on the position. The article was wholly untrue, wholly uncalled for and an insult to the executive that no spirited man could afford to pocket—coming from Washburn, and it is said that when Mr. Nelson read it he at once decided to take the field against Washburn. After the Washburn crew saw the effect of their ill-advised action they then tried to shoulder it all off on the governor, calling him "dishonorable" a "renegade" and all that stuff. If Mr. Nelson has made a mistake in this matter, Mr. Washburn's fool friends have themselves to thank for it.

SHOULD SUCCEED HIMSELF.

The St. Paul Dispatch comes out strongly in favor of Washburn since Gov. Nelson entered the list of candidates. The Dispatch says:

"The formal appearance of Gov. Nelson as a candidate for the United States senatorship, to succeed Mr. Washburn, lends to the contest a degree of interest and casts about the result a measure of uncertainty which did not prevail until the announcement made in these columns yesterday.

It is not necessary to inquire concerning the immediate cause of Gov. Nelson's appearance as a candidate, or whether his decision in that regard was made late or early in the canvass. It suffices that he is a candidate.

The Dispatch does not propose to engage in a discussion of the propriety of the governor's appearance as a candidate at this time. We leave the settlement of any question of that character that may arise to the determination of the two leading senatorial candidates themselves. It is proper to affirm, however, and the Dispatch does so without qualification, that apart from anti-election pledges or undertakings, Gov. Nelson has merely exercised the right enjoyed by every citizen of character and attainments, even less distinguished than his, to become a candidate at any time and avow his candidacy under whatever conditions may seem to him proper.

If Senator Washburn should prove to be the choice of his fellow Republicans in the legislature, as his own successor, it will be alone upon his merits as a representative in the United States Senate of the people of the commonwealth of Minnesota, and by virtue of his undoubted and invaluable services in that capacity. His residence in the city of Minneapolis is a mere incident to which more or less importance may be attached according to the circumstances of the contest.

Senator Washburn deserves well of the people of this state. His claim to re-election is as well founded as that of any public servant who has brought to discharge of official duty, distinguished ability for public affairs, unquestionable probity, and talents and experience which, in private pursuits, are usually regarded as inestimable in value. The continuance of such men in high public station should be encouraged; the loyalty to the public welfare which distinguishes the services of such men, remains, after all is said, entitled to the only just recognition that can be bestowed on it by the people.

It is for these reasons that Senator Washburn should be elected, and that the Dispatch, while recognizing the pre-eminent merits of Gov. Nelson, urges upon every consideration of party and public policy, the selection of Senator Washburn as his own successor.

GOVENOR NELSON.

Announces Himself a Candidate for United States Senator.

(Pioneer Press.)

Gov. Nelson has authorized the announcement that he is a candidate for United States senator. This determination appears to have been hastened, if not induced, by the violent attack made upon him by the Minneapolis Tribune of Wednesday for his alleged treachery and bad faith in having inspired Comstock's candidacy in opposition to Washburn, ending with the insulting suggestion that Comstock was a puppet put forward by him to play into his hands.

The Pioneer Press is friendly to both these gentlemen and proposes to treat them fairly and frankly. And in this spirit it is obliged to say that this attitude of the Tribune is simply a more than usual offensive expression of the claim put forward by Mr. Washburn's Minneapolis friends in general and by Mr. Washburn himself that Gov. Nelson has no right to enter the field in opposition to his candidacy; that he is precluded from doing so by ante-election pledges. It is sufficient to say that Gov. Nelson explicitly denies ever having made any pledges of the character attributed to him. No Republican surely had a right to exact any such pledges as a condition of his political support of the nominee of the Republican party for the highest office in the state. The averment of the Tribune that, if it had been known that Gov. Nelson was opposed to Washburn, Minneapolis would have given 20,000 majority against him, we believe to be a libel on the Republicans of Minneapolis. Much as they might have desired the re-election of Senator Washburn they would not have been injudicious or absurd enough to have made adhesion to his interests the test of party fealty or declare war on every candidate for office who would not pledge himself in advance to support Washburn. Those of them who had much to do with the state campaign would have discovered that it would probably have cost the Republican party more than 20,000 votes if Mr. Washburn's re-election had been made an issue of the campaign. The claim that the result of the state election was virtually a declaration of the popular preference for Washburn for senator is another mistake of fact and policy. During the campaign for the election of members Mr. Washburn was the only candidate for United States senator in the field. He had abundant opportunity to test the issue of his candidacy for re-election in every legislative district in the only way in which that issue could have been made on the question of instructing the Republican candidates. As a matter of fact, no such was made outside of Minneapolis, except in four districts. Most of the members who are supporters of Mr. Washburn did not care to go before the people in that character or handicapped with instructions of that question. The members of the legislature will come to St. Paul uninstructed except in four instances, and free to do as they choose.

It became apparent some weeks ago that the general expectation that Mr. Washburn was to meet with no serious opposition was to be disappointed; that his avowed supporters were a minority, and not a large minority, of the legislature. The fact that a considerable majority of the legislature was either actively opposed to him or non-committal constituted a situation which naturally invited the competition of other candidates. Mr. Comstock was allured by the opportunity which presented itself to take the field. Mr. McCleary, with the record of his brilliant and effective fall campaign to commend him to Republican favor, was tempted to try his fortunes. Then there was no reason why Gov. Nelson, whose splendid services to his party had recently been crowned by his re-election by 60,000 majority, should not respond to the appeals of his friends and become a candidate for the highest prize which any state can offer to the legitimate ambition of its sons.

He had a right to be a candidate. The situation warranted the free competition of all who chose to be candidates. The best thing that Mr. Washburn and his friends can do is to frankly acknowledge this, put aside their preposterous pretentions and go in and make a manly, square honest fight for Washburn on his merits as a man and a senator. That Gov. Nelson is likely to prove a formidable candidate they have impliedly acknowledged all along in the efforts which have been made to exact from him some pledge that he would not be a candidate. The elements of strength which made him feared by them as a candidate constitute his right to be one. Every citizen has a right to be a candidate for the United States senate who has proved his capacity to represent the state in that body with honor and credit, as Gov. Nelson has. That is Mr. Washburn's only title to the support he solicits, and it is a sufficient one. Possession for one term gives him no exclusive franchise in the office, although it forms a strong argument why he should be retained in a position in which he has given general satisfaction.

Recognizing the merits of both and all the candidates and the validity of their respective claims to the support of the Republican party, it remains for the representatives of the people in the legislature to exercise their constitutional right, the right to choose between them. There is no reason why the contest should not be a good-natured one and the combatants remain the friends they have been heretofore.

SPEAKER S. R. VAN SANT.

The legislature was organized in due form on Tuesday. Capt S. R. VanSant, of Winona, was elected speaker of the House. Not much business of importance will be attended to before the senatorial question is disposed of.

Warren Register:- Ex-Congressman Comstock is out for the Senatorship. Mr. Comstock represented this part of the state in congress for two years, as a member of the so-called "Reed congress." If the legislature should decide to send Mr. Comstock to the Senate, the people of Minnesota may rest assured that their interests will thereby be placed in the hands of one who will see to it that they are properly taken care of.

THREE GREAT CANALS.

Completed by the Red River Drainage Commission The Past Two Years.

The Work of the Commission is Exceedingly Creditable—The Canals That Have Been Opened and Those Still Under Way—Counties Taking up the Matter and Will Appropriate more Money—The Legislature Again to Called Upon.

The members of the Red River drainage commision had a meeting at the state capitol last week to clear up the work of the year and prepare their report for the govenor. President Ezra J. Valentine, Secretary of State Brown, N. D. Miller, chief engineer of the Great Northern, were present.

The state two years ago appropriated for the work of the commision $100,000, and the Great Northern gave $25,000 additional, the appropitions to be extended over four years. The commision has been at work for two years and in that time has expended half of the appropriation, but has done considerable more work than it expected, and the cost has been far below the estimates.

At the end of the second year the commision finds it has completed three great canals—the Sand Hill, Polk county some six miles in length; the Tamarac canal, in Marshall county, seven miles, and the Mustiaka canal, in Traverse county, about six miles in length. These are not ditches, but canals, large enough for small steamboats. They have a bottom twenty feet wide, and sloping banks, which give a surface width of about thirty-five feet. The canals are from four to ten feet in depth, and are intended to open up the small river on which they are generally located.

Several other pieces of work are but partially completed. Some three miles of the Borup canal has been excavated, and about two miles of the Ada canal, in Norman county have been completed. Three miles of the Kennedy canal, in Kittson county, are finished. Contracts have been let for two large pieces of work on the Otter Tail and Rabbit river, in Wilkin and Traverse counties, but the routes for the same have not yet been definitely decided upon.

These canals are the large arteries of a system of drainage to be extended all throughout the Red River valley. They are built in connection with natural waterways which have become almost useless, but which will now be of the greatest value to to that section of the state. The people of the different counties are taking up the work where the state leaves off, and the citizens of Polk county have already voted $50,000 for side drains leading into the main channels. Other counties are talking of doing the same thing.

The cost of the canals has in every instance fallen far below the first estimates. It was estimated that the Tamarack canal would cost $55,211, but it was built for $21,483.06. The Sand Hill canal was built for 23,774.71, and the estimated was $62,262. The plans and specifications are all furnished free of cost by the Great Northern road, and as the commissioners draw no salary, the work has been most economically conducted. There seems to be a splendid opportunity to do more work in this same direction, and the people of the valley are anxious for further appropriation this winter.

"A Trip On the North-Western Limited between the Twin Cities and Chicago is like rolling in a King's Palace over two smooth rails. If the travelling public of thirty years ago had been told of the beauties and comforts of this fine train the story would have been thought a fairy tale. But it is all a reality now and the wonder is what new comfort or luxury will come in the future. Whatever it is, it will surely be found on The North-Western Line long before other lines think to adopt it.—The Press, Osceola, Wis.

THE COUNTY BOARD.

Meet and Organize for Business on Tuesday—Oppegaard Chairman.

Tuesday was a busy day at the court house. The board met promptly at ten o'clock and approved of the bonds of the newly elected county officials, who thereupon entered upon their various duties like old stagers. For some reason or other every newspaper in the county was represented and the boys acted as though they expected something, John Oppegard was made chairman of the board and that body took a recess until 2 p. m. Upon re-assembling in the afternoon the bids for printing were opened and the award was made to the Fertile Journal, which paper was duly made the official paper of Polk county. Two other bids were in that offered to do the work very much less, but—they did not get it. The balance of the week will probably be occupied with business to come before the board.

We feel a load of obligation to some dear friends whose recent actions have been such as to prove that the universal brotherhood of mankind is not a myth, but a living, breathing reality. We refer not only to those whose words of good cheer have helped us to breast the waves of affliction that rolled over us threatening to engulf us, but also to those whose sympathy has taken a practical turn that led them to call and place their names on our subscription list with the wherewithal to carry on our business—seemingly a little thing to do, but wondrous cheering to us under the circumstances. We have had many such and our best endeavors for the coming year shall be to labor acceptably for these and all of our many friends. If we are ever tempted again to imagine ourself alone and friendless, we shall recall these evidences that prove to the contrary, with great pleasure.

Rev. Mr. Fisher had a big audience at the Congregational church on Sunday evening, and, as usual, gave a very interesting discourse. The Congregational people are making arrangements to give Mr. Fisher a call for the coming year.

The County Fair.

The great running horse-race scene which is the feature of the "The County Fair," has been the talk of the theatre goers during the past week, and many have been puzzled to account for the production of this really startling stage effect. Steam, horsepower and electricity contribute to it. The electric lights in the theatre are flashed out and after a few moments of inky blackness the flying horses appear at the back of the stage in a blaze of light. They are straining every nerve and fairly flying past a varied landscape. Fences and trees disappear behind them with startling rapidity, and when at last the finish is near one of the horses gradually works forward, winning by a neck as he reaches the judges' stand; then an instant of darkness, and in the flash of light that follows the horses are pulled up and the race is won. Through the courtesy of Mr. Burgess, who devised the apparatus, THE JOURNAL is enabled to give a detailed account of the ingenious mechanism by which this remarkable effect is produced.

The picket fence behind which the horses appear to be running and panoramic scenery beyond are set in motion by electric motors, and both form endless belts, which moves at the same speed past the horses, producing the effect of rapid motion of the animals in the contrary direction. The fence in the foreground, running over flanged wheels specially adapted for the purpose, has guides that hold it rigidly perpendicular during its passage over stage.

Three flexible, endless platforms passing over the rollers at the sides of the stage serve to complete the illusion by enabling the horses to be in rapid motion without actually moving forward, except as controlled by the engineers of this scene. At the proper time, as the race nears the finish, the platform on which the winning horse is stationed is gradually slipped forward on a track provided for the purpose by a steam motor. The space between the fence and the scenery behind is fourteen feet, giving ample room for free action of the horses, and much of the effect of the scene is due to the extreme suddenness with which the electric lights can be flashed off and on, throwing the stage from extreme darkness to brilliant light and back again in an instant, so that the whole scene appears as a vivid panorama before the audience. Mr. Burgess has this remarkable mechanical device patented by twenty-seven patents.

When the play was first produced in New York some very funny episodes occurred. During the excitement attendant on the first week's production the man who handled the lever which controls the machinery that moves the platform forward and backward, enabling the horse Cold Molasses to win the race, lost his head and pulled the wrong lever, causing a perfect furor among the actors. As the winning of the race by Cold Molasses is inseparably connected with the story, the humor of this mistake can readily be perceived. The purse won enabling Abigail Prue to lift the mortage off her farm, but this night she did'nt get out of the clutches of the mortgagee.

Previous to the production in New York the racers brought from New York to be used in the play were again placed on the machine and rehearsed in their parts. One of them, Ginger by name, absolutely refused to go on. Why, no one could understand, as he had played this part over two hundred nights and invariably receiv ed his salary, in the shape of sugar plum. Mr Burgess worked all night with him, but he would not budge. This strike at the last moment caused great excitement, and all the stables in town were scoured in search of horses. Over one hundred horses were tried, and only one who was willing to work upon the moving platform. He was secured, however, or the part, but at the last moment Ginger evidently came to his senses, and has appeared nightly so far to good advantage, as the critics would say; but Arthur G. Thomas, who is superintending the production, is taking no chances in this matter.

That the jockeys who ride the horses evidently relish the riding and and get the same amount of excitement out of it as on a race-course is evidenced by the conversation of Harrison, one of the colored jockeys brought here from Guttenburg.

"Golly!" said Harrison, his eyes rolled and a broad grin breaking over his ebony countance, " Why, it's just us excitin' as when you're running on a good mile track. You bet, I give it to him, too when I get on dat hoss. Make time? Why, of course we does. Why, we's on dose machinca a minute. What do you suppose?"

This scene, which must be viewed to be appreciated, is certainly one of the most effective bits of realism ever put on the stage and its effect on the audiance is really wonderful.

SKATING IN CHINA.

Its Utility In Carrying on the Internal Trade of the Country.

Skating is a business with the Chinaman rather than a sport, for he contrives to turn frozen canals into convenient highways for his merchandise, as they do in Holland and Denmark. Passengers are carried in sledge chairs, propelled by an active Celestial on skates, and there is no more enjoyable way of making a tour round the 17 miles of wall which encircles the ancient city of Peking than in a sledge of this description. The canals afford facilities for locomotion which are not to be found in the dirty streets, crowded as they are with overworked humanity.

It is not likely that the Celestials will ever astonish the world with a rival to our Smarts or Sees, for they do not aim at great speed of progression, but they are nevertheless fairly qualified adepts in their way, and there have been some efforts made to introduce ice yachts out there, which would indeed be a grand thing not only for sport, but for the transport of goods at a time when all traffic is practically as a standstill, owing to the impassable condition of the wretched causeways which do duty in China for highroads. There are over 70 miles of the Pei-Ho annually covered with ice several feet thick, bank to bank, extending from Tung-Chan, the port of Peking, to the mouth of the river at Taku, in the gulf of Chili. What a noble race course this would form for our fen skaters!

It is not commonly known that the capital of China is icebound for five months out of the 12, or that the stolid looking Chinese could ever be graceful skaters, yet both these facts are well established. The Chinese use a very inferior style of skate, of their own manufacture—a mere chunk of wood arranged to tie on the shoe and shod with a rather broad strip of iron. There is no attempt at elegance of design or at anything approaching a spring fastening. A pair of "Acmes," when shown by the writer to some native students in the Chinese capital, produced unbounded astonishment and admiration by their neatness and strength. On the other hand, the very cheapness and simplicity of the common native made article tend to make skating general.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

THE INTELLIGENT HORSE.

In the Cavalry Charge His Own Fury Is Half the Battle.

The fiery spirit of the horse has been greatly subdued in servitude, but is not entirely conquered. The hunter and the charger, when in the excitement of the chase and battle, are far from being mere dummies on which their master rides. The judgment of a good hunter is oftentimes better than that of his town bred rider, who, by attempted guidance, brings both to grief.

Houssay relates that wild horses meeting an equine friend in harness are wont to gambol about as though inviting him again to freedom, and that if his driver tries forcing them away with his whip they will crowd closer, bite the traces and kick the vehicle until they have released their captive brother. The Tyrolese, in 1809, so history tells, took a number of Bavarian horses and used them in their service, whereupon they suddenly turned back to their old ranks, and nothing would stop them. The civil war furnished instances of this nature.

Dr. Romanes, on the authority of Dr. John Rae, quotes an instance that occurred several years ago. A Shetland pony, when purchased, had never been shod. It was shod at once. Later it came to the blacksmith shop unattended and unhaltered, and when driven away returned again. The smith finally found one shoe gone. He promptly shod the foot, when the pony stamped it a few times, as if settling the shoe into better position, and then, with a happy little neigh, trotted off home.

Professor Claypole of Ohio tells of a Toronto horse that was feeding beside a stream, over which its mistress started on a foot plank. She fell in where the water was deep. Instantly the animal trotted up, put down his head, and seizing her held her with his teeth until help came. Even a mule, that is generally thought to move only when clubbed and then in the wrong direction, is not a whit less knowing.—Lewiston Journal.

DOCKING HIS TAIL.

MAKING NOBBY CARRIAGE HORSES BY THE NEW OPERATION.

How the Job Is Done by One of the Professional Farriers—A Sharp Knife and a Redhot Iron—Keeping a Sharp Lookout For S. P. C. A. Spotters.

Horses' tails are now docked in a new and, it is claimed, a more humane way. The work is done by specialists, who call at the stables to perform the operation. Like dentists, who dull the pains of teeth extracting by seating the victims on luxurious plush chairs, modern farriers try to make their patients comfortable during the tail clipping. Still, despite these well meant efforts, docking is painful. But stablemen all say it is not as painful as tooth pulling.

In the present case a farrier was summoned to perform the operation. He arrived at the stable, carrying his outfit in a canvas bag, like a sailor's kit. After asking the coachman if the people present were "all right," the farrier carefully bolted and locked the doors and windows opening into the street and the back yard.

"Excuse me, gents," said the farrier briskly as he fastened the last window, "but I have to be on my guard. Only last week a bloke jumped me over a back fence, and that cost me $100, that did."

One of the back windows was left open from the top, although the shutters were closed, so that the draft would carry off the fumes of a small charcoal furnace, such as plumbers use, that the farrier started up. This was to bring the cauterizing irons to a white heat.

The horse was then led into an end stall and fastened by an ordinary headstall to the manger, which was filled with oats. A piece of stout canvas, supported by a wooden framework previously built up in the stall, was swung under the horse's body. On one side this canvas hammock was secured by immovable fastenings, but on the other side the fastening ropes were tied to pulleys, so the horse could be raised up in the hammock.

Some stout wooden rails were built up to make a fence behind and almost touching his hind legs. The tail was laid across the top rail and a strap put over it. The hammock was then raised up until the horse was almost on his toe tips. Trussed in this way the horse could not kick or move his body or tail.

Now the actual operation began. The coachman tied a stout string around the tail at the place the incision was to be made and gathered up the long strands of hair that fell over it into a coil and fastened it back with a string, so as to expose the skin of the tail vertebræ. He then took a firm hold on the lower end of the tail, and the farrier began work.

The old fashioned docking shears with which the tail used to be divided are now out of use. The operation was done with a surgeon's amputating knife. The farrier poised the sharp edged lance over the vertebræ, and with short, deft strokes, wielding the knife with a steady hand, he cut through the flesh and cartilage, quickly severing the tail.

There was no flow of blood, the string tied above the cut checking the hemorrhage. While the farrier brought an iron at white heat from the furnace the coachman clipped a bunch of hairs from the severed end. He covered the raw cut thickly with the hairs, and then the cauterizing iron was pressed against the flesh. A sickening odor of burning hair and flesh arose at once, making the air of the closed up stable almost suffocating. This was the end of the operation. Both the cutting and the burning had been done inside of 60 seconds.

As a precaution the horse had not been fed that morning, and he began ravenously munching at the oats as soon as he was tied to the manger. During the cutting the horse did not quit eating, but he shook his head, and the body quivered when the iron burned the flesh. At this time, too, the horse gave a shrill neigh of pain, and but for the supporting hammock he might have fallen, for he tried to crouch down in the stall. As soon as the iron was removed the pain must have vanished, for the horse immediately began at the oats again and seemed at ease. By this improved method the operation is less cruel than under the old style of amputation.

The farrier's fear of detection was due to the vigilance of the Society For the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, which offers a standing reward of $100 to any one who will report a case of docking at its offices and give the evidence necessary to convict the offenders.—New York World.

John Wesley's Wife.

John Wesley married a widow, Mrs. Vizelle, who grew tired of his restlessly laborious life and complained. He paid no attention, and from complaint she went on to jealousy, thence to fury. He rebuked her sternly: "Do not any longer contend for mastery, for power, money or praise. Be content to be a private, insignificant person. Of what importance is your character to mankind? If you were buried just now or had never lived, what loss would it be to the cause of God?" She left him, taking with her a large number of his private papers, and he dismissed the subject by writing in his journal: "I did not forsake her. I did not dismiss her. I shall not call her back."

Food For Thought.

"How do you like my new dining room motto, 'Eat, drink and be merry, for tomorrow you die?'" asked the boarding house landlady of the old boarder.

"I think it very appropriate," he said, with a suggestive glance at the famine before him.—Detroit Free Press.

Taken.

"I propose," began the deliberate old lawyer who called around to see a young widow on business, when his vivacious client exclaimed, "I accept." They are now partners.—Dallas News.

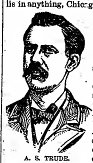
CHICAGO'S JOHN W. GOFF.

Lawyer Trude Will Conduct the Investigation of the Lake City's Police Force.



A. S. TRUDE.

Not to be behind the eastern metropolis in anything, Chicago is about to commence a vigorous investigation of the corruption alleged to exist in her police department, and some of the revelations may turn out to be quite as sensational as those made by Lexow's committee in New York. As much of the credit of the Lexow discoveries is due to Attorney Goff, the counsel of the committee, so a great deal of the glory to be derived from the Chicago investigation will probably be secured by Lawyer A. S. Trude, who has been retained as chief counsel and prosecutor.

Alfred S. Trude has long occupied a leading position at the Cook county bar and has been particularly distinguished as a successful criminal lawyer. From 1873 to 1886 he defended 34 men and 2 women charged with murder. Since then he has avoided that sort of practice and has only taken six murder cases. Mr. Trude has also been prominent in the defense of railroads and of newspapers charged with libel. A year ago he was engaged as leading counsel for the state in the prosecution of Prendergast for the murder of Mayor Carter Harrison.

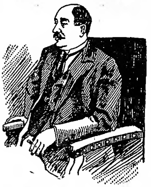
Mr. Trude's parents were English and emigrated to this country in April, 1847. Alfred was born on board ship while the vessel was lying in quarantine off the port of New York. The family settled in Lockport, N. Y., and there young Alfred first went to school. He was graduated from Union college at Schenectady at the age of 17 and then went to Chicago, where he studied law, and was admitted to practice in 1871. In 1868 Mr. Trude was married to Miss Algenia D. Pearson of Lockport.

Mr. Trude is described by a colleague as "a fluent speaker, powerful in argument and possessed of a peculiarly powerful magnetism, which invariably makes him one of the most successful of jury lawyers and a dangerous opponent on the merits of a case." His efforts have not been confined exclusively to the law, and he has won local fame as "the man who knocked out mud pies" in the public schools. This achievement was performed by virtue of his position as president of the Chicago board of education, an office which he now holds.

TO TEST THE INCOME TAX.

Broker Moore Will Fight Uncle Sam's Taxgatherers.

John G. Moore, a New York broker, has brought suit in the district supreme court at Washington to restrain Joseph S. Miller, commissioner of internal revenue, from collecting the income tax. As this is the first suit to test the constitutionality of the law, Mr. Moore is likely to acquire a good deal of notoriety before the case is decided.



JOHN G. MOORE.

Mr. Moore is about 50 years old, tall and portly. He is a power in Wall street, where he has been a broker and speculator for 25 years. He occupies what are said to be the finest offices in the street and is reputed to be many times a millionaire. Mr. Moore declines to reveal the precise amount of his income, if indeed he knows the amount, but it is probably very large. The tax involved must amount to more than $5,000, or the case could not be carried to the United States supreme court, where Mr. Moore expects it to be finally decided.

Mr. Moore is associated with Senator Calvin S. Brice and General Sam Thomas in their vast railroad enterprises, and he is a director in nearly all the Gould corporations. He owns a good deal of real estate in New York and Washington, and it will be remembered that his firm, Moore & Schley, was charged with having bought sugar stock for wicked United States senators a few months ago. They refused to "give away" their clients when called before the senate investigating committee, and, with the contumacious newspaper correspondents who first circulated the charges, may have to answer for contempt.

Mr. Moore avers that he is the only person interested in his suit, and that no other individual, trust or combination of persons is sharing any part of the expense. The fact that ex-Senator George F. Edmunds, who has been retained in this case, is also the attorney of Sugar Trust Havemeyer is merely a coincidence, he says.

Burns Coal Dust Without Smoke.

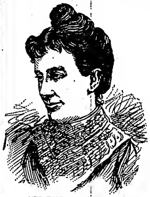
An apparatus for burning coal dust has been invented and brought out in Germany. It is stated that the consumption of even the most inferior class of coal dust is attended with no smoke, while the heat produced is so intense that the apparatus has been adapted in Berlin to smelting works and with excellent results. The gases, as analyzed contain 9.8 per cent carbonic acid, 1 per cent air, 79.2 per cent nitrogen.

THE HEROINE OF JOHNSTOWN.

Mrs. Hastings, Wife of Pennsylvania's New Governor, Well Deserves the Title.

Mrs. Daniel Hartman Hastings, wife of the new governor of Pennsylvania, may well be called the heroine of the Johnstown flood. Her husband was the hero, and as she was early at the scene of death and desolation and for days and weeks labored earnestly to relieve the suffering inhabitants of the stricken city, she may quite appropriately be termed the heroine of the flood. Mrs. Hastings is the eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James H. Rankin, one of the old and respected families of Bellefonte. She is a brunette of medium height, with dark hair and eyes and a charming manner that instantly places the most embarrassed visitor at ease. Refined, intelligent, well educated, ambitious and tactful and yet thoroughly domestic, she has been a helpmeet indeed to her talented husband.

A dozen years ago, when the governor was a struggling young Center county lawyer just beginning his political career, she read all his speeches before he delivered them, and he found her advice and criticism of great value. In the summer of 1890, when Mr. Hastings made such a strong fight for the gubernatorial nomination, Mrs. Hastings accompanied him on his campaigning tours and won him many friends. Although Delamater secured the coveted nomination in place of her husband, she was not discouraged and remarked that better luck would come in four years. How true her prediction proved is a matter of recent history.



MRS. DANIEL H. HASTINGS.

After the election came the deluge of office seekers, and in this emergency Mrs. Hastings was as helpful as she was at the literal deluge in Johnstown. She has met scores of callers, listened to their claims and entertained them until the general could take them in hand. She is smiling, affable and possessed of tact, and those who know her well predict for her a brilliant reign as the leading lady of the commonwealth. Her elder daughter, Miss Helen R. Hastings, a golden haired, blue eyed girl of about 16, will be her strong right hand in entertaining, and Baby Sara, a little tot about a year old, will be without doubt the most talked of infant in the state.

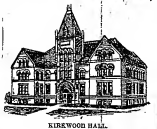
Indiana University Claims This Honor Among the State Colleges.

Indiana State university, the oldest college in the west, will dedicate a new building with imposing ceremonies in Bloomington on Jan. 25. The building is called Kirkwood hall, in honor of Professor Daniel Kirkwood, who occupied the chair of mathematics in the university for over 25 years. It is a handsome stone structure and cost $60,000. The governor of Indiana, nearly all the state officers and many of the alumni will be present. Professor Kirkwood, who is now a resident of Los Angeles and an honorary professor of astronomy in Leland Stanford, Jr., university, has also written President Joseph Swain that he will be on hand to assist in dedicating the handsome structure that bears his name. President Angell of Michigan university will deliver the dedicatory address, and Governor Matthews will also speak.

Indiana State university is a nonsectarian institution and was organized in 1828. Forty instructors are employed, and the attendance of students is about 500. One of the features of the institution is coeducation, and another is the valuable library, consisting of over 18,000 volumes. The university receives the graduates of all the high schools in the state and is free to all. The total number of pupils graduating since the founding of the university in 1828 is said to be only 1,076, and there are 941 alumni living, the eldest of whom is M. M. Campbell, A. B., of North Topeka, who was graduated from the university in the year 1836.



KIRKWOOD HALL.

Fire has played no small part in the college's history. In 1854 the buildings were swept away by a conflagration, and the same calamity overtook the university in 1883. About ten years ago the legislature ordered a half cent tax on the property of the state, and it is believed that when the privilege expires in 1896 the university will receive a total state fund amounting to nearly $1,000,000. In 1867 women were admitted to all the privileges of the college, and the university claims to have been the first state institution to take this progressive and liberal step.

Blood Purified and Pains Driven Out by Hood's Sarsaparilla.

"C. I. Hood & Co., Lowell, Mass.:

"I can say with all my heart 'Praise God for Hood's Sarsaparilla.' Three years ago rheumatism terribly affected my hands and feet, mostly in the joints. They became inflamed and swollen. The family physician treated me and for a time I thought I was free from my trouble, but shortly it returned with renewed energy. My heart was affected so that my breathing was suffocating during the attacks of Extreme Agony.

I would be apparently well on going to bed but in an hour I would be awakened by shooting pains in the joints, and could not move without increased pain. Anything applied did not give relief until the doctor recommended blistering, which, though severe treatment, lessened the pain. During all my trouble I had thought seriously of taking Hood's Sarsaparilla. Finally I began with the medicine and I simply say that and thankful for what Hood's Sarsaparilla has done for me. I believe that if anyone troubled with rheumatism or anything caused by bad blood would take a course with Hood's Sarsaparilla and take it in earnest that they will get well and be happy. POULTRY EXPERIMENTS.

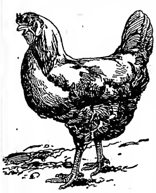
Seasonable Suggestions and Notes About Leghorns and Plymouth Rocks.

Haven't you noticed that hens don't like to stay in their roosting places during the day? I have, and I don't blame 'em, says Fannie Field in Farm Poultry. I should not like to stay cooped up in a bedroom all day. I am inclined to think that the chief reason why so many late molting hens either keel up and die or else linger along and get their new suit on so slowly that they are no good as layers until well on toward spring is because they have no sheltered loafing place. For a week past I have been watching a few old Leghorn hens that are so nearly naked they are not fit to appear before folks, and although I don't particularly admire the Leghorns as a tribe I must say that I respect these Leghorns for the good they have done and for the good sense they now display. They kept right on laying while their old feathers were dropping off, but now that their old suits are gone to almost the last feather and they have only the newest of pinfeathers to cover their hides they have quit laying and appearing in company and spend their waking hours under that shed, which is open only to the south. They loaf, but they do not droop. Their eyes are bright, and barring their lack of covering they look well. And how they eat! It always seemed to me that a Leghorn could hold more food in proportion to her size than anything else on earth except a hearty, growing boy, but these Leghorns outdo all the gastronomic feats of all the other Leghorns that I ever had any acquaintance with. But they put their food to good use, for I can fairly see the new feathers grow.



BUFF LEGHORN HEN.

Now, I know that some who read this will laugh at the idea of my owning a Leghorn and say: "Ah, ha! I thought you would come around to a liking for the great egg producers if you would only get rid of your prejudices and give them a fair trial." Not quite so fast. I didn't buy these Leghorns and don't like them over and above well. They "fell" to me along with a much run down farm, and as they were laying I concluded to keep them while they paid. Now I am going to keep them still longer to experiment with. In dollars and cents many of the experiments that I propose to make not only with Leghorns, but with other breeds and with fowls of no breed, with foods, houses, brooders, etc., will not pay me, but they will be of benefit to other poultry raisers who may not have either time or money to conduct experiments themselves. Much of the ground I have gone over before and have given the results to the poultry world, but the work was conducted under other and more favorable conditions. Now, I recognize the fact that poultry experiments to be of practical benefit to farmers and farmers' wives and daughters who are trying to find out how to make the farm hens pay must be conducted under something like the conditions that prevail on the majority of farms.

There are not many who have the time or opportunity to do this, but to me has come the chance, and I shall do my level best to make the most of it, and if the people who may profit by the work that I shall do in this line do not rise up and call me blessed they will be an ungrateful set.

But to get back to the breeds we have some of our old favorites—the Barred Plymouth Rocks—that are as old as the Leghorns, already mentioned, and they, too, are molting, but none of them get so nearly naked as the Leghorns, and most of them are laying. They don't drop their feathers all at once, but a few at a time, and the new ones come in the same way, so I doubt much if they really know that anything unusual is going on. They show it, though, for the new feathers, so dark and glossy, scattered around among the faded and dull old ones, give their plumage the appearance of a patchwork quilt. We have but one of the Rocks that is really ragged, and in all our experience with Rocks we have seen but few that were very ragged at molting time, and they seemed to mind molting much less than Leghorns.

Ten Times Ten.

Ten hens in a house that is 10 feet square, with yards ten times the size of the house, is a rule to go by. Ten hens with one male is the correct mating, and ten eggs under a sitting hen in winter are enough. Ten weeks are long enough to keep a broiler before it goes to market. A pair of ducks or fowls should weigh not over ten pounds; 10 cents per pound is near the average price for fowls in market, and 10 cents should feed a hen one month.

Don't Overfeed.

Be careful about the quantity of food given to the pullets. Don't overfeed. If corn was worth $10 a bushel, it would be a blessing to the poultrymen by arousing them to the fact that something else is better. Stop the waste of corn and permanent injury to the pullets. Eggs are high, and this should be the poultryman's harvest time. It may be if the hens and pullets are not overfed and allowed to get fat.

HENS OR PULLETS?

Young Birds Give the Best All Around Profits.

The question of laying qualities of hens and pullets is not yet settled. Some claim that a hen 2 or 3 years of age will lay more eggs and better eggs than a pullet. But a writer in Farm Poultry says he has tested with care the profits of each and finds it best to turn off the old birds when they are about 18 months old and have early hatched pullets ready to take their places. Of course he refers to the farmer and not the fancier. He says: A fancier who wants his best egg yield to come in March, April and May can be very well content with few or no eggs during the period of the molt and sluggish laying during December, January and February, because the rest and recuperation of that period prepare the older birds to compete closely with the pullets during the months when the eggs are wanted for hatching. The farmer, on the contrary, wants eggs in November, December and January if he wants to get the prices which pay the cream of the profit. The very reason why eggs are scarce and high in October, November and December is because the 1 and 2 year olds are taking a rest molting and recovering from the molt and the great bulk of the pullets are not yet laying. Here is an example, which we have quoted before, taken from our experience one year that we kept 125 hens and pullets:

	No. of eggs.	Average price per dozen.	Value of eggs.
December	1,626	38	$51.49
January	2,068	30	51.70
April	2,232	15	27.00

It costs us about $1.35 a year to feed a fowl, which would be $14.00 a month for 125, and we find that the December and January eggs paid a profit of $37.43 and $37.64 respectively, while April, with a larger number of eggs, paid but $13.84 profit. Take the example of the "Four Thousand Eggs In December," which we published last February. The exact number of eggs laid was 3,957, which were sold at 40 down to 30 cents a dozen, practically $130. The food bill at 11¼ cents per fowl a month is $42.75, giving us a net profit of $87.25 in a month when most of the 1 and 2 year old hens are resting. A comparison of the egg yield of some of those pens, as given in the "Study of the Egg Yield," shows that 192 pullets laid 2,392 of those eggs, practically 12½ eggs apiece, while 72 1-year-old hens laid but 350 eggs, a little less than five eggs apiece. In other words, the year old hens paid for their food and a very small margin of profit, while the pullets paid for their food and a good big profit besides.

Ventilate the Hennery.

Ventilation, properly arranged, is essential to the health of the fowls in winter, and it tends to increase their egg laying. Every hennery should have a ventilator, but it should always be closed tight on the approach of cold weather. Many ventilators do more harm than good. The idea is to keep the air circulating only when the weather is warm. During cold weather sufficient ventilation can be given by throwing the doors and windows open in the day time. If impure odors seem to affect the inhabitants of the house, the one thing needed is a thorough cleaning throughout. Cold winds and drafts from ventilators cause the death of more fowls than almost anything else in the improved sort of henhouses. Ventilation is essential to the health of the fowls, and hence to their egg laying, but it can only be obtained by forethought and care. Watch the thermometer and regulate the air accordingly. It will pay in the end.

A Good Ration.

One man who lives on the outskirts of the city keeps about 300 hens. The morning feed consists of a warm mash. Sometimes it is composed of bran, middlings and ground corn and oats, and sometimes of but one or two of these. A little egg food is added to this mash three times per week. The refuse and scraps from five restaurants are obtained daily, and these form the noon feed for the birds. At night their feed consists of mixed grains. No green food or vegetables are given them except such as are among the waste from the restaurants. Grit is given them in the form of crushed limestone, which is bought already prepared. These fowls lay remarkably well, and the secret of it is in the variety of food they get among the restaurant scraps.

Poultry Notes.

In buying new stock be sure to purchase from reliable breeders. There seem to be more opportunities for cheating in the poultry business than in any other.

A good cure for roup is to put three drops of camphor on a piece of bread to give to the fowl. In two or three days it will be all right.

When fowls habitually lay thin shelled eggs, their systems are not in a healthy condition and have generally become enfeebled by overfeeding and getting overfat. Thorough change of diet, air, sun and exercise will be followed by the production of perfect eggshells.

It is said sumac berries will cure cholera. A neighbor had cholera in his flock, and as soon as he commenced feeding sumac they ceased dying and were soon entirely well.

How many of the farmers are there, do you think, that kill off the old hens each year and depend on the early hatched pullets for their egg supply? And yet we can assure them that the egg supply will greatly increase with the same number of pullets as of the old birds.

After the first year a hen has generally seen her best days as a layer, and she will generally lay on fat instead of eggs. How much better to have pullets that will lay three days and lay off one than old hens that lay one day and lay off three!

During the winter, when the hens cannot be given a good range, it is a good plan to give them meat twice a week.

A YOUNG GIRL'S FORTUNE.

AN INTERESTING SKETCH.

Nothing appeals so strongly to a mother's affection as her daughter just budding into womanhood. Following is an instance: "Our daughter, Blanche, now 15 years of age, had been terribly afflicted with nervousness, and had lost the entire use of her right arm. She was in such a condition that we had to keep her from school and abandon her music lessons. In fact, we feared St. Vitus dance, and are positive but for an invaluable remedy she would have had that terrible affliction. We had employed physicians, but she received no benefit from them. The first of last August she weighed but 75 pounds, and although she has taken only three bottles of Nervine she now weighs 106 pounds; her nervousness and symptoms of St. Vitus dance are entirely gone, she attends school regularly, and studies with comfort and ease. She has recovered complete use of her arm, her appetite is splendid, and no money could procure for our daughter the health Dr. Miles' Nervine has brought her.

When my brother recommended the remedy I had no faith in patent medicines, and would not listen to him, but as a last resort he sent us a bottle, we began giving it to Blanche, and the effect was almost immediate."—Mrs. R. R Bullock, Brighton, N. Y.

Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine is sold by all druggists on a positive guarantee, or sent direct by the Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind., on receipt of price, $1 per bottle, six bottles for $5, express prepaid. It is positively free from opiates or dangerous drugs.

FLOWER TRADE ABBREVIATIONS.

Short and Expressive Names For Popular Flowers as Used by Florists.

That florists and florists' clerks have a language of their own when it comes to the making up of orders is an interesting fact not appreciated by the young man who wishes to send a bunch of violets or roses to his best girl, or the father of a family in swelldom who receives a large monthly bill for the decoration of his parlors. Respectfully and deferentially does the florist stand by a customer and murmur the longest floral names without abbreviations.

But when he and his assistants are alone horticultural titles are clipped short. The most cherished and expensive blossoms, no matter how great their dewy fragrance may be, are treated with scant respect.

It is "Hey, Jimmy, a dozen of those 'mums,' " a voice will cry. "And don't forget that lot of 'tubies' for Mrs. Smith-Smith." Indeed the ardent lover of blossoms would be disenchanted if she listened to the talk of the trade for a brief half hour.

There are no rules of abbreviation, and some of the longest floral names are never clipped, but spoken exactly as they are written. Even the most ignorant florist's clerk speaks precisely of hyacinths, geraniums, mignonette, lilacs, violets, poppies, magnolias, orchids, ivy, jasmine, phlox and carnation pinks. His abbreviations are logical as a rule, and oftener than otherwise he makes use of the first or last sound of a name.

Here is a brief sample of the Florists' Ready Guide:

The Postal Whistle.

New York undoubtedly has an admirable mail service. A city letter sent on its way within business hours will get there almost as quickly as a telegram, and not infrequently quicker than a messenger. The deliveries and collections are frequent, the carriers careful and courteous, and blindly directed missives are generally delivered to their owners after a very short hunt. How letters bearing only the name of comparative strangers are promptly deposited in office or flat boxes surprises strangers. When the postman drops a letter in your house box, or deposits paper or packet on the tiles beneath it, he pulls your bell and whistles. These postal whistles are similar to those used by the police. So when the bell jingles and the whistling follows there's no need to open the door or wonder who's there. You know all about it. The postal whistle could be adopted with benefit elsewhere.—New York Letter.

An Illinois Girl In Washington.

I sat next an Illinois girl in the house gallery and marked the manner of her speech, which was strange to a Washington ear. She did not slight a single "r." The broad English "a" eastern people affect was unknown to her. She asked me what time congress "took up" and when it "let out." She spoke of a brook in her home and called it a "branch." She said it seemed so funny to get six car tickets for "2 bits," and she told me she had not attended the opening of congress because she "could not get to go," but that she meant to hear just as many great speeches as she could "get to hear." Then she excused herself and went away, as she said she had "some trading to do for ma."—Washington Post.

Tying the Knot.

One part of the wedding ceremony among the Babylonians was very significant. The priest took a thread from the garment of the bride and another from the garment of the bridegroom and tied them into a knot, which he gave the bride. This is probably the origin of the modern saying about tying the knot in regard to marriage.

All children are liable to attacks of croup, and while all mothers have a dread of this disease, how often does it happen that they are aroused from their sleep by the croupy cough of a child, and find themselves with nothing at hand to protect and maybe save the life of their little one. It is not expensive to have a bottle of Haller's Sure Cure Cough Syrup in the house. Give it freely. Hoarseness disappears. Phlegm in the throat is loosened and your worry ceases. Do you know that perfect health and prime condition depends upon the proper assimilation of the food that you take to sustain life and strength and the prompt and natural discharge of the waste. The Common Cold.

Medical writers have recently called attention to the fact that the common cold, which most people suppose they "catch" by undue exposure, though they cannot, for the life of them tell how or when, is frequently the result of a debilitated condition of the body, and that the head-ache, catarrhal trouble, sore throat and other accompaniments of a cold are signs of an impure condition of the blood. This explanation is at least reasonable, and it is desirable that it should be understood, as it points to the proper and only method by which this uncomfortable and in many instances, dangerous condition may be avoided or overcome. It is not uncommon to hear people remark that they suffer constantly with "a cold" from early fall until the warm weather returns in the spring. This is undoubtedly due to the fact that the system is weakened, that it lacks vitality, is poorly nourished and can not resist the severer trials that come with the coming of fall and winter weather.

Of course the remedy for these ailments, and the preventive, if they have not already made their encroachments, consists in a course of treatment which will build up and strengthen the physical system. In the first place the blood must be purified and invigorated so that it can carry health and vitality to all the organs of the body, enabling the heart and lungs, the liver, bowels and skin to perform their proper functions. The digestive organs must then be stimulated and strengthened and made to do their part in supplying the wasted and much needed strength to the system.

For the work of purifying the blood and giving strength and vitality to the system, nothing has yet been found equal to Hood's Sarsaparilla. The burden of the testimonials from people who have taken Hood's Sarsaparilla is that it purifies their blood, removes pimples, boils and all similar eruptions, gives them an appetite and makes them feel strong. This is just what is needed to fortify the system against that condition for which people in general have no better name than a "cold." A few bottles of Hood's Sarsaparilla taken at this season would be sufficient to give that tone and stimulus to the organs of the body which are indispensable to health, especially in trying weather, and certainly, a few dollars expended now in taking measures to prevent sickness or even the discomforts of a long continued "cold" would be better than a fit of sickness and heavy doctor's bills later on. In buying medicine, as in buying anything else, it is well to see that you get an honest article, and such Hood's Sarsaparilla is everywhere recognized to be.

LIVING A LA JAPONAISE.

Simple and Delightful and Very Cheap Is the Housekeeping In Japan.

I do not know of anything simpler and more delightful than housekeeping in Japan—if you live a la Japonaise. I myself determined to try it, and having found a suitable spot to settle in, on the highest hill in Tokyo, I proceeded to engage a native servant, who was also to be my adviser as to how to furnish my establishment in strictly Japanese fashion. The furnishing was completed in less than ten minutes, and here are some of the principal items of which it consisted: Two fontangs, or thin mattresses, between which one lies at night, and a makura, a wooden pillow, or rather an instrument of torture for the first few nights, furnished my bedroom; a hibachi, or brass brazier, with chopsticks to stir the fire with, and a water kettle made the [illegible] cozy, and a little lacquer table, a [illegible] square and about 6 inches high, with a couple of tiny little plates and a bowl, made the dining room quite complete and replete with every comfort. Two silk cushions were placed in the sitting room for distinguished guests to sit on.

"Ah," said I to my servant, "but do you not think that I shall need something more?" as to my European mind what I had purchased seemed somewhat insufficient to furnish a 12 roomed house.

"No, sir," said he in his broken English, "real Japan gentleman has no furniture." Upon which I began to feel rather sorry to have emulated the "Japan gentleman." Still I thought I would go on for the fun of the thing, and, though I must confess as I went round my new abode my rooms did not look overfurnished, I decided to make the best of what I had got. It is astonishing with how little one can do if one tries and how much better penury is than profusion. When a couple of days had elapsed, I almost began to feel that I had furnished my house too richly! I could certainly have done with a deal less.—Fortnightly Review.

THE WIFE OF MASCAGNI.

Story of the Origin of the Famous Opera, "Cavalleria Rusticana."

All the world now knows the story of "Cavalleria Rusticana"—how it was submitted to a musical friend, who promptly pronounced it "rubbish;" how Mascagni despondently entered it in the competition for the prize of 2,000 francs ($400) offered by the musical publishers of Milan; how he accepted the prize as a windfall beyond the wildest hopes of a man who, with wife and two children, was existing on 2½ francs a day, writes Olive May Eager in an interesting sketch of the wife of the famous Italian composer in The Ladies' Home Journal.

The subsequent furore in Rome was a revelation, and in answer to a telegram he hurried to the capital in his usual negligee—in fact, his only dress—the clumsy handiwork of a village tailor. Apparently a simple, countrified young fellow, he appeared on the stage before that immense and enthusiastic audience, which cheered him all the more that he was awkward, bewildered, even stupefied, at the reception. The transition was too great, and he felt his brain reel. Sympathizing, admiring faces crowded about him, but something of his everyday life, something more restful, he must have, and that speedily. Rushing home after the performance, he telegraphed for his wife, and also dispatched an incoherent letter imploring her to pick up the children and come to his aid without delay.

She came at once—a plain, quiet body, who, during those tedious years of seclusion and hardship, had deteriorated in appearance and had lost the worldly veneering of her younger days, but nevertheless a truehearted helpmeet for an agitated, fame stricken man. That night she sat in a private box, listening to the wonderful strains and still more wonderful enthusiasm, weeping tears of joy throughout the performance and clapping wildly with the rest upon the appearance of the new genius.

LL FOR WASHBURN.

The Minneapolis Evening Journal ms up the situation as above saying that the members of the legislature who went home to visit their nstituents over Sunday have returned with the news that the country all for Washburn. If this be true is not singular that Washburn, having had the field all to himself for e past two years did not succeed getting enough pledged votes to fely elect him? That Governor Nelson, entering the field only a few ys since has already got more edged votes than has Washburn?

there is such an overwhelming ntiment in the State for W. D. ashburn it is very surprising that is such an uphill job to elect him. The fact is that W. D. is extremely npopular in the State and the Eveng Journal well knows it but for asons of its own does not like to mit it. It is the opinion of the st informed men of the state that . WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, JAN. 11, 1895.

The Carlisle-Cleveland monstrosity illed by courtesy a currency bill is ead—was killed by a vote of the louse, 129 to 122, refusing to adopt n order setting a time for a vote. rs. Cleveland, Carlisle and Springer efuse to believe that the corpse is uite dead, and are still trying to resuscitate the deceased. There will be o funeral ceremonies, for the very ood reason that there are not nough mourners to form a respectable gathering. The blow which illed the unmourned measure drove ome the wedge that split the democratic party in twain, and there eems little probability that the two vings will ever again be found nited upon anything, for which the ountry has every reason to give hanks.

The administration did everything n its power to save the currency ill, even going to the extent of hreatening to put the country on a ilver basis if it was not passed, by efusing to pay gold for Treasury otes presented for redemption, but t was no use; the country had condemned the measure as bad and a najority of the House thought it etter, safer and wiser to please the ountry than to please the administration.

It being now certain that no financial legislation either good or bad an be expected from this Congress, be belief is general, both in and out f Congress, that an early extra session of the Fifty-fourth Congress will e called to consider financial legislation. It is no longer a question of what Mr. Cleveland wants, or what he democratic party wants; but of what is necessary to maintain the redit of the United States government, which takes precedence of all other questions. The democrats having proved their incompetence, the epublicans must be asked to come to the rescue.

Ex-Speaker Reed's sprained ankle sn't entirely well, but he returned to is Congressional duties this week, n order to be on hand when the House knocked out the Carlisle currency bill. He limps a little, but characteristically refuses to make use of a crutch or cane.

Level-headed republicans are glad that Representative Sibley, of Penn., who this week made one of the most disgraceful personal attacks upon the President of the United States ever heard upon the floor of the House, claims allegiance to the democratic party. Republicans do not admire Mr. Cleveland—few people do, or can—but in criticising his public acts they never allow themselves to forget that he is President. Mr. Sibley's speech was sprinkled with coarse language, which should never have been allowed to be uttered on the floor of the House, or anywhere else in the presence of gentlemen, but for some unexplained reason no member called him to order and be kept on until his time had expired, although there was no indication that his supply of billingsgate was exhausted. Think of a member of Congress referring to the President as a combination of "brains, belly and brass," and as a "hog" and as a "buzzard." If the House did the right thing it would expel Sibley from membership as a warning to future blackguards who may by accident get elected to Congress.

The Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia, the three justices of which were appointed by Mr. Cleveland, has affirmed the decision of the lower court, refusing to grant a mandamus compelling Secretary Carlisle to take steps towards the payment of the bounty on sugar partly produced at the time the repeal of the sugar bounty law went into effect, and two out of the three justices went further and declared that, in their opinion, the sugar bounty was unconstitutional, and the third—Chief Justice—declined to express his opinion as to the constitutionality of the sugar bounty. It is a question that will never be definitely settled until it has been passed upon by the U. S. Supreme Court, where it will eventually be carried.

Still another message on Hawaiian matters was this week transmitted to Congress by Mr. Cleveland, accompanied by a batch of correspondence from Mr. Willis, U. S. Minister to Hawaii. Great Britain wishes to lease an island belonging to Hawaii, to be used as a station for a submarine cable from Canada to Australia, and the Hawaiian government wished to lease the island, but cannot do so without the consent of the United States, owing to a clause in the reciprocity treaty with this government. Mr. Cleveland refers the request of Hawaii for a modification of the treaty so the lease can be made to Congress without positive recommendation, but it is easily inferred from his language that he favors granting it.

COME TO MINNESOTA.

The papers this week are full of reports concerning great storms in the east, centering in New York. We read of tremendous snow-drifts, of blizzards and extreme cold weather as we sit here in the garden of the world under our own cherry tree, sweating in the noon-day sun, reading the news about "cold weather in the east," and vainly trying with the vigorous use of a palm leaf fan to keep cool. Even in the southland, in Florida, the weather has been so cold that the orange crop is almost a total loss, entailing a loss of hundreds of thousands of dollars to the dwellers in that benighted region. The moral to all this is perfectly plain—if you would reach a climate as near to perfection as this earth affords, you must come to Minnesota to find it.

THE SITUATION.

On the senatorial question the Pioneer Press says: "The senatorial situation is mixed. One thing is quite clear, and that is that neither one of the leading candidates can truthfully claim a majority of the Republican members of the legislature—or anything approaching to a majority. A very considerable proportion of the members of the legislature are as yet uncommitted. Both Comstock and McCleary are considerable factors in the determination of the contest. In the event of a dead-lock it would not be a bad thing for Minnesota if either of these two candidates were chosen. Comstock is an able man. His views on public questions are intelligent and sound. McCleary is a scholar and a thinker. None of the candidates did so much as he during the campaign to disabuse the people of the illusions and fallacies on the money question which had been widely disseminated by Populists and other cranks. No one can now forecast the results of the contest, but among its reasonable possibilities is the election of this man who knows what he is talking about when he talks about public questions. And the state would be fortunate in that result of the controversy.

PACKING HOUSE.

Speaking of the prospective pork packing industry in Crookston the Ada Herald says:

"At Crookston there is some talk of establishing a pork packing house. If established it will do much to encourage hog raising in the valley. It happened here last fall that farmers who came with a load of hogs had to take them home again or ship them to Moorhead or Fargo and such an experience will not encourage the same men to go into the hog raising business extensively. A packing house in this neighborhood will create a market at home."

JAPAN.

It was our pleasure to take a trip through the land of the rising sun, Japan, with the Rev. L. E. Squier, as guide on Tuesday evening at the M. E. church. What we saw on our trip would fill a large sized book, had we the time and descriptive powers to enable us to write it, but we must content ourself with the remark that all who failed to hear this lecture missed a great treat. The audience was somewhat larger than the night before and all enjoyed it hugely.

THE DISTRICT COURT.

The adjourned session of the district court met on Tuesday morning. The judge delivered an impressive charge to the Grand Jury and sent them about their business and then proceeded to the regular routine work. The first case called was that of Adolph Bydal, publisher of Red River Dalen against W. E. McKenzie and Sheriff Grundysen for damages alleged to be caused by a foreclosure of a chattel mortgage. The case was dismissed as the plaintiff failed to show up.

HARD TIMES.

As hard as the times have been all over the country for the past year or so, it is a fact that the prospects for the future of the Red River Valley farmers are not as blue as in almost every other section of the country. In the first place we did not start in with land that would easily command all the way from $100 to $200 per acre and see it shrink away over half in value. While it is true that land here will not command as great a price now as it would a few years since, our farmers have really lost nothing from that fact, because the most of them got their land for almost nothing and the land is just as good to-day to crop as it ever was. For a year the prospects for steady markets for other products than wheat have been steadily increasing. This fall has demonstrated that wheat even is worth a profitable price to feed to hogs, and as soon as a packing house here renders a market a sure thing, pork-raising will become a reliable and a profitable business.

Other products of the farm that heretofore have not cut much figure in the general revenue, are looming up with great promise—oats, barley, flax, potatoes and the products of the dairy and the poultry yard. Our farmers will all readily recognize the fact that heretofore they have placed their entire dependence upon wheat to the exclusion of everything else when they come down to the consideration of a ready source of revenue. They have not relied upon oats, they have not relied upon barley, they have placed no dependence upon potatoes, upon butter, upon eggs, upon pork, nor even upon all these combined, they have even bought too much of these products for their own consumption, relying upon wheat to pay it all—and the result is they never yet have seen a year when wheat alone would stand the drain—and they never will. One reason why the coarser grains have not been raised more extensively is found in the fact that we have not always had a reliable market for these things; but this is being changed and the prospect indicates more than ever before, a good market for all the farmers can produce. With this incentive farming ought to be a good business in the near future and all have just cause to be encouraged.

Hypnotism.

The Ging murder in Minneapolis, the remarkable allegations of two girls at Eau Claire, and the experiments of some medical men in substituting hypnosis for anæsthetics in surgery and dentistry, have excited a ferment in the public mind, which swings like a pendulum between utter disbelief in hypnotism and the blindest credulity to tales of the entire subjection of one mind to another. Hypnotism is as old as history, was well known to Egyptians, Greek and Roman sages, and is the same thing as mesmerism or animal magnetism. the preponderance of evidence is that it is a sleep induced by the operator, but only when the subject consents there, and that no one can be hypnotized against his will. The stories of hypnotizing by a passing glance, or at a distance of a mile, are on a par with tales of witchcraft, and deserve as little belief. The word is from the Greek "hypnos," meaning sleep, and has has been twisted from its original signification into a horrifying mystery. Really, it is merely a suggestion to the mind to sleep, and it is asserted confidently that one can hypnotize himself. To get sound sleep, however, it is not necessary to resort to hypnotic suggestion—the only suggestion needed is to purchase your ticket to Chicago or St. Louis via The Burlington Route, and with a berth in the Pullman sleepers you slumber sweetly and wake with the suggestion that a breakfast in their dining cars is the best preparation for the following day. For tickets, maps, etc., apply to the local agent, or write to W. J. Kenyon, Gen. Pass. Agent. St. Paul, Minn.

Do you know that perfect health and prime condition depends upon the proper assimilation of the food that you take to sustain life and strength and the prompt and natural discharge of the waste. You must keep the sewers open. Keep the liver and kidneys in a healthy state. There is no better remedy made for this important service than Haller's Sarsaparilla and Burdock and F. L. DISTRICT COURT.

JANUARY 15, 1895.

Tuesday morning at 10 o'clock court convened. The new grand jury was the "hero" of the hour and each juror, as he was called to take his place and receive the instructions of the court, was critically scanned by the crowd of spectators. Twenty-one of the twenty-four answered the first call and one more came in later.

The court asked the attorneys at the bar if they had any challenges to make to the jury. No challenge interposed. The court charged the jury at some length, saying, among other things, that before an indictment could be found, they must be satisfied that an offense has been committed; and you must be satisfied that the person charged is guilty of committing the offense. An explanation of the proper kind of evidence allowable was given. That it was the duty of a grand juror, when he knew or had good reason to believe that an offense had been committed, to bring the matter before the grand jury. That he should not shirk this duty for the sake of getting out of a disagreeable job. That all their considerations should be kept inviolate.

The court then approached the matter of interest to many, and about which his calling a new jury has caused a good deal of comment and criticism, viz: Gambling and houses of prostitution. He said: "Upon the good order of citizen and state depends the happiness of our people. You have the same right to go into these houses and look into the manner of their conduct as you have to go into any other public house. They are thrown open to the public and the good people everywhere are complaining of their baneful influence. I hope you will not allow yourselves to stop in your investigation until you have taken the matter into careful consideration and thoroughly investigated the whole thing. I have no right, nor do I ask you to do anything but what the law requires; nor do I as the court, or as an individual expect you to do anything more than the law requires. But the court does expect, and the good people of this county and state do expect that you will take this matter into consideration and give it such a thorough and careful investigation as will leave no stone unturned. If the court is right in the position he has taken you might sustain him. If he is wrong, and you find gambling has not been carried on, and nobody is guilty of it, I shall be perfectly satisfied. But, if upon investigation you find that gambling has been carried on in public places, and that houses of prostitution have been allowed to operate, and our villages and cities to run "wide open," as the saying is; and it has been the policy of the government to allow such things to be carried on, it is your duty to say whether such has been done or not. It is not for me to take this matter into control; the law provides that you will do that. I expect that you will do your duty in handling this matter. If we wish to eradicate any great evil it is the usual case to begin at the root. It has been the custom in times past to fine these offenders and perhaps imprison them once in a while, and let the matter run in its usual course. It is no use to deal with it in that slip-shod way. The persons who have control of the cities and municipalities are to blame for this gambling and houses of prostitution. There will be no difficulty in having good order in all our towns and cities if the persons in charge, the mayor or president of the village and chief of police do their duty. The law requires that they shall look after these matters." The court read from chapter 10, of general laws of 1888 regarding the duties of mayor.

He further explained that the mayor had complete control, and if they found any mayor guilty of permitting state laws to be broken and violated knowingly, and permitting these bad practices of gambling and houses of prostitution to be carried on he is guilty of malfeasance in office and it is your duty to indict him. This, he said, was the root of the whole matter. The chief of police is under the control of the mayor and can do nothing except as directed by the mayor in control.

E. D. Childs was appointed foreman. F. H. Peterson, Esq., of Moorhead, was sent up by the governor to assist with the prosecution.

After a call of the calendar and hearing a few motions court adjourned until 2. p. m.

AFTERNOON.

The case of Adolph Bydal vs. A. D. Stephens, W. E. McKenzie and Arny Grundysen was set for this afternoon. H. Steenerson, Esq., for plaintiff and A. C. Wilkinson, Esq., for defendant. On account of plaintiff being absent and no argument for trial could be had, the case was dismissed. Some motions on appeals were heard, and an adjournment was taken until 9 a. m., Wednesday.

WEDNESDAY MORNING, JAN 16.

Albert Engesetter vs. G. N. R. R., Steenerson for plaintiff, Wilkinson for defendant. Plaintiff asked to amend complaint and case continued.

Thompson vs. G. N. R. R., same attorneys, jury trial, sues for $3,100 damages by being thrown from a hand-car in June '94. Evidence shows that the occupants of the hand-car had been holding to the railing on the rear coach of the St. Hilaire train in order to save the trouble of pumping, but whether they were doing so at the time the hand-car wheel broke has not as yet been brought out.

The Grand jury brought in an indictment against Thos. Hanson for assault upon the person of a 7-year-old girl, in the town of Fairfax. A. R. Holston was appointed to defend.

THE CHINESE.

Rev. L. W. Squier's lecture on Monday evening was rather poorly attended considering the interesting subject presented and the very entertaining manner in which it was done. His hearers were taken on a trip through China, given a view of her principal cities, of her great wall, of her great men and women with their methods of dressing and eating and of their customs. After such an insight into Chinese life it is small wonder that the Japs, who are plucky little chaps and fully abreast with the times in all of the very latest improved implements of war, got away with the great chinese nation as easily as they did. We were shown how tea is prepared for the market in such a graphic manner that we have quite lost our (not very extensive) love for that fragrant (?) drink.

This lecture was deserving of an audience as large as the house could accommodate but no doubt the entertainment at the opera house kept many away. Such an insight into chinese life and character as was given for the small sum of 15 cents has cost the lecturer hundreds of dollars to gain and is worth many times its cost to all who were fortunate enough to be there. There were a goodly number of children present —not nearly as many as should be in a city like Crookston where there are so many, however.

GOOD MARKETS.

A starch factory is talked of as one of the improvements of the near future. For the past year or two the market for potatoes has been good enough and did not require the stimulous of a factory, but that condition of things cannot last always and in ordinary times a starch factory would be a great help to farmers by providing a sure and reliable market for potatoes. Then a large pork packing establishment should be established which would furnish another market for farm produce which would be invaluable. As it is both of these products find a market that is not reliable, not steady, and the result is that the farmer is not encouraged to produce them. Another industry that should be added is a good creamery. One trouble with the butter of the country is a lack of facilities to make a uniform grade, such as the market demands. A creamery would obviate this difficulty and would add one more source of revenue to the products the farmer would have for sale.

TAYLOR'S SHORTAGE

SOUTH DAKOTA'S TREASURER SAID TO BE AN EMBEZZLER.

Three Hundred and Fifty Thousand Dollars of the State Money Is Missing—The State Will Lose Most of It, as Bondsmen Are Not Worth Much—Suit Begun on the Bonds.

REDFIELD, S. D., Jan. 10.—Probably the most startling failure that has ever occurred in South Dakota or the Northwest was revealed when word was received from William Walter Taylor, the outgoing state treasurer and president of the First National bank and Northwestern Mortgage Trust company of this city, that he could not appear to make his settlement at Pierre with his successor, Treasurer-elect Phillips of Deadwood. The news and closing of his bank here came like a thunderclap from a clear sky, because both Taylor and the financial institutions with which he was connected Were Regarded as Firm and Reliable beyond question. The news from Pierre demonstrates that no money is held there to the credit of the state treasurer, and none is held in the bank here. It is estimated that about $350,000 is missing with Taylor. Aside from the financial loss the action of Taylor is felt terribly by all who have known and done business with him and the financial enterprises with which he has been connected in years past. He and his enterprises here have handled many thousands of Eastern capital and his bank here has always been regarded as one of the firm, safe institutions in the state.

STATE WILL LOSE HEAVILY.

Several of Taylor's Bondsmen Not Worth a Cent.

SIOUX CITY, Ia., Jan. 12.—E. W. Miller, United States district attorney for the district of South Dakota, in an interview here concerning ex-State Treasurer Taylor's shortage said:

"I have learned that Taylor has very little, if any, of the money taken from the state by him. He was interested largely in banking and had friends who were in speculative enterprises, and he loaned money to them with the expectation that when the time came to repay it they would be able to make the loans good to him. This they were unable to do and the money has gone where It Will Never Be Recovered, and where it will never do Taylor any good. If the matter is sifted to the bottom, and I am of the opinion it will be, there will be some surprises in South Dakota. Taylor is not the only man to blame in the affair either. It was known in state house circles as long as a year or two ago that his accounts were not what they should be, and there was a determined effort made first to renominate him, and then secure the nomination of a man friendly to him In Order to Cover His Tracks. This failed, and of course the shortage came out. The state officers who accepted the bond furnished by Taylor are also to blame. It is a fact that but little can be realized on it. Men were permitted to qualify on the bond for thousands of dollars who were not worth a cent over and above their debts. I can name a dozen men on the bond from whom a cent cannot be recovered. There are some on the bond who are good and will have to settle, but it will ruin them to do it."

AFTER TAYLOR.

Bondsmen Would Like the Missing South Dakota Official to Divide.

CHICAGO, Jan. 15.—Ex-Governor Arthur C. Mellette has come down from South Dakota on the supposition that the defaulting state treasurer, W. W. Taylor, may be in Chicago and anxious to make a settlement. He is interested to the extent of a $50,000 bond in the location of Mr. Taylor and to start action in the matter he called a meeting of the men who had guaranteed the treasurer's honesty. J. T. McChesney of New York, who was an equal indorser with the ex-governor, was the first to arrive and several days will be spent in a conference over ways and means and on examination into the exact condition of affairs.

Think Taylor Would Compromise.

The men from the North now estimate the shortage at $370,000 which is $20,000 more than the bond. It is the opinion in Huron and Pierre that Taylor will produce $200,000 as soon as he is found, and a willingness to do this and remove the embarrassment of the present treasurer would probably secure much leniency as to the remaining $170,000. There are 17 men on the Taylor bond most of whom have been asked to the conference.

"It is a question now," said Mr. Mellette, "whether Mr. Taylor is in this country or Europe. There is Much Diversion of Opinion, but I am of the opinion he is here and may try to make a settlement. He disposed of his Evanston and Chicago real estate before he dropped from notice. This is taken both as a sign that he wanted all the ready money possible for his travels and that he was getting his collaterals into cash for a possible settlement. There is as yet no plan of action, but the indications are that a settlement is most desired. The state needs money at once."

MRS. HANSBROUGH DEAD.

Wife of the North Dakota Senator Succumbs to Pneumonia.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 15.—Mrs. Hansbrough, wife of Senator Hansbrough of North Dakota, died at 1:30 p. m. at the Cockran hotel, of acute pneumonia. Mrs. Hansbrough was about 44 years of age and was the daughter of James Orr of Newburgh, N. Y., where her father still resides. Senator Hansbrough first met her in California, where she was visiting when he resided in that state and they were married in Chicago about 15 years ago. She leaves no children. Mrs. Hansbrough was not a society woman in the popular term but she made many friends wherever she lived and the wives of few public men have endeared themselves more to those with whom they came in contact than she did. The interment will take place at Wappingers Falls, N. Y.

BROOKLYN, Jan. 15.—All the street car lines of the city were tied up at 5 a. m. About 6,000 employes are out. HAWAIIAN CORRESPONDENCE.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 10.—President Cleveland has submitted another large batch of Hawaiian correspondence to congress. Want Their Money.

YANKTON, S. D., Jan. 14.—The English creditors of J. T. M. Pierce of this city, who swindled them on forged school bonds, have scheduled their losses at $1,187,000. The documents have been received here, and an agent has come to stay until a settlement is made. It is believed here that they will complete the Norfolk and Yankton railroad in order to recover a portion of the losses.

SCORES PERISHED.

DISASTROUS COLLIERY ACCIDENT IN NORTH STAFFORDSHIRE.

Thought That Sixty Men and Boys Have Been Drowned by the Inrush of Waters From an Abandoned Working—A Hundred and Fifty Rescued.

LONDON, Jan. 15.—Throughout the night relays of men have worked at the Diglake colliery, Audley, North Staffordshire, where a large number of miners were entombed about noon by a sudden rush of waters from the old workings. One hundred and fifty men and boys employed below were rescued. Of the remainder it is thought 60 were in the lower workings and are thought to be drowned. From the time the disaster occurred, the rescuers have been doing their utmost to save those who remain alive and to recover the bodies of the drowned. The work of rescue, however, has not made much progress, and it is now believed there are between 90 and 120 men and boys in the mine. The water so constantly fluctuates that the rescuers are well nigh discouraged. They found the bottom of the shaft choked with piles of timber swept there by the torrents of water which poured into the mine. All this timber must be removed before the entombed men can be reached. But the ceaseless pumping does not seem to materially affect the stage of water.

A COMPROMISE.

Senator Jones Has a Currency Bill That Will Suit All Interested.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 14.—The probabilities are that the beginning of the week will see the introduction of still another currency bill in the senate. Senator Jones of Arkansas, who at the critical stage of the tariff legislation took the matter in hand and harmonized the different elements so as to bring definite results out of a decidedly chaotic condition, is the author of the new bill and he comes to the front this time as a compromiser and harmonizer. There has been objections made to the bills prepared by Senators Vest and McPherson on the ground in the case of the Vest bill that it Leans Too Much Towards Silver, and in the case of the McPherson bill that is too exclusively in the interest of bonds. Senator Jones realizes that silver and bonds are the two antagonizing elements in this question and his effort has been to prepare a measure which will perhaps not be all that the friends of either cause would naturally demand, but will in the end secure the support of both elements. He has been in consultation with many of the leaders of both these contending elements in the senate; and it is understood that his bill, as outlined to them, has received very favorable endorsement from the representatives from All the Conflicting Interests.

It is also understood that the terms of the bill are not unfamiliar to leaders in the house. Furthermore it is probable that it has been brought to the attention of the proper authorities in the executive branch of the government.

The bill will first provide for the issuance of 2½ per cent bonds to the amount of $500,000,000 which are to be paid in gold and are to be used both for the purpose of meeting the current expenses of the government and the redemption of United States and treasury notes. The bill will also provide for the issue of bank notes to take the place of the treasury notes in such a way as not to produce a contraction of the currency. Another provision is that the national banks shall be allowed to Issue Up to Their Par Value and the tax on national bank circulation is fixed at one-quarter of 1 per cent. In the interest of silver the bill provides for its unlimited coinage under the condition that the holder of silver bullion may take it to the mint and have it coined into silver dollars, the government retaining a seigniorage, the difference between the coinage value of the bullion and its market value on the day that the bullion is taken to the mints. It also provides for the withdrawal from circulation of all greenbacks, treasury notes and national bank notes below $20, and the substitution of silver certificates in less than $20, to be payable in silver. The bill will contain provisions providing against either undue inflation or contraction.

Approve Spain's Attitude.

MADRID, Jan. 14.—The minister of foreign affairs, Senor Groiseard, declared in the senate that the commercial convention between Spain and the United States relating to the agricultural products of Cuba would probably be concluded at once. Sixty senators and deputies, representing the interested districts, approve of the government's attitude.

STATE LEGISLATURE

TWENTY-NINTH BIENNIAL SESSION

Wednesday, Jan. 9.

The senate and house at noon witnessed the inauguration of Governor Nelson for a second term as chief executive of Minnesota.

The governor's message to the legislature was delivered and was strongly commended as being a clear and forceful state document, fraught with good to the state at large if accorded due attention by the legislature.

SENATE.—Ramsey county got the first bill before the senate, by Senator Ozmun, amending the military code so as to establish two battalions of five companies and two majors, term of service three years or more, and state troops to be supplied with uniforms by the state, and carrying an appropriation of $10,000 for the purpose.

Senator Sevatson handed up a bill to provide for the destruction of Russian thistles and other noxious weeds. Senator Miller introduced a similar measure. Both provide a fine for farmers and road overseers who do not keep their farms and the roads clear of these pests.

By Senator Stevens—Bill to amend state constitution authorizing taxation of sleeping cars operated by companies or owners.

By Senator Wyman—Primary election law, applying the Australian ballot law, so far as practicable, to the primary elections.

By Senator Allen—Bill to tax railway lands not used as rights of way or gravel pits, side tracks, depots and all buildings and structures necessarily used. This does not disturb the law taxing gross earnings.

The house did little of importance. Papers in the Furlong contest are on file until the committee on elections is named.

The mileage allowance is 15 cents per mile for one round trip.

Thursday, Jan. 10.

SENATE—Among the important matters that came up was the introduction of a resolution by Senator Wyman for the appointment of a committee to look into fire relief matters in Pine and other counties, and a bill to make up the relief deficit. The committee named is composed of Senators Wyman, Hodge and Cronkhite.

Senator Keller introduced a bill cutting down the salaries of state officers, by which he claims to save $36,349. Salaries would be cut as follows: Governor, $2,500; secretary of state, $1,750; state auditor, $1,800; treasurer, $1,750; librarian, $1,000; commissioner of labor, $1,200. Other bills introduced were:

By Senator Cronkhite—To appropriate $100,000 for the opening of streams in the Red River valley.

By Senator Spencer—To provide for a settlement of the indebtedness of municipalities, etc., when annexation is made. Provides for the settlement of the indebtedness by the district court in case the interested municipalities and towns cannot agree.

By Senator Ruverud—To amend secs. 1 and 4, chap. 76, General Laws of 1883, concerning mutilated, lost and destroyed bonds, orders and warrants.

By Senator Wyman—To appropriate $140,000 for the expenses of the legislature. The rules of the house were suspended and the bill passed.

By Senator Miller—To propose an amendment to art. 8 of the statutes so as to permit the loaning of school funds on real estate security.

By Senator Stevens—To authorize the common councils of cities to reduce the compensation of certain officers and employes.

Senator Ringdahl introduced a bill to have the office of oil inspector abolished, and have the duties performed by the secretary of state.

HOUSE—The bill appropriating $140,000 for current legislative expenses was passed.

Representative Moore introduced a bill repealing the new capitol law passed at the last session. Mr. Moore believes the state is too poor to build at this time.

By Representative Johns—To provide for codification of the statutes.

By Representative Gutterson — Referring to insurance loans.

By Representative Anderson—Providing for the taxation of railroad properties.

Resolutions were introduced favoring the appointment of a reading clerk at $5 per diem; to provide supplies for the sergeant-at-arms, and to invite the G. A. R. to hold its national encampment at St. Paul in 1896.

Representative Feig introduced a bill making it a penal offense, punishable by fine and imprisonment, for state, county or city treasurers, or officials entrusted with public funds, to demand or receive any gift, reward or commission for the use of such public funds. The penalty is five years in prison and fine of $1,000 for violating any section of the law.

Adjourned to Monday, Jan. 14.

Monday, Jan. 14.

HOUSE—The house met at 8 o'clock in the evening with a quorum present. Chaplain McCune offered a short prayer, which was followed by roll call.

The secretary of the senate reported the passage by the senate of a joint resolution providing for the appointment of a committee to investigate and report on the suffering from the Hinckley forest fire and to recommend some legislation on the subject.

Mr. Johns rose to a question of privilege, and presented Speaker Van Sant with a handsome gavel, the gift of the pupils of the St. Paul manual training school.

Speaker Van Sant, in accepting, made a brief reply, extending his thanks to the donors.

The Commercial clubs of the Twin Cities presented a memorial asking for earnest consideration of the question of preserving forests from destruction by fire and the repetition of the Hinckley calamity.

Mr. Furlong presented a resolution regarding the death of John L. Marlam. It provided for adjournment from noon Tuesday to 10 a. m. Wednesday, and for a committee to attend the funeral. The resolution was unanimously passed.

The joint resolution providing for the appointment of a committee of three from the senate and five from the house to inquire into the particulars and recommend some legislation concerning the sufferers by the Hinckley forest fires was, on motion of Mr. Anderson, adopted.

The speaker announced that the members who desired could draw their mileage allowance at the state treasurer's office for the half-hour succeeding adjournment. The house then adjourned until 10 a. m.

SENATE—The session of the senate was one of the shortest on record. It consisted merely of a roll call, a few sentences read from the journal and an adjournment until 10 a. m.

THE WORK OF CONGRESS

Tuesday, Jan. 8.

Lodge's resolution asking for further information regarding Hawaiian matters took up the time of the senate until 2 o'clock, when eulogies for the late Senator Colquitt were delivered.

The house spent the day debating the currency bill, several prominent Democrats speaking against the measure.

Wednesday, Jan. 9.

The urgent deficiency bill was reported in the senate without amendment. At 2 o'clock Mr. Pascoe addressed the senate on the Nicaragua bill.

In the house the rules committee met with a defeat when it proposed to close debate on the currency bill. The rule was voted down 124 to 129. After this had been done the diplomatic appropriation bill was taken up and passed.

Thursday, Jan. 10.

The income tax came in for considerable discussion in the course of debate on the urgent deficiency bill, which contains a provision for carrying the law into operation. Senator Hill offered an amendment designed to afford an opportunity to contest the constitutionality of the act. Mr. Quay gave notice of several amendments. Mr. Caffrey of Louisiana commenced his speech on the Nicaragua canal bill, and had not completed it when the senate adjourned.

The proceedings in the house were exceedingly dull, most of the day being consumed in the consideration of the District of Columbia appropriation bill. which was passed. Several bills of minor importance, relating to steamship matters, were passed, and also 10 private pension bills.

Friday, Jan. 11.

Mr. Hill's amendment to the income tax provision of the urgent deficiency bill occupied most of the time of the senate. Senator Hill delivered a long speech.

There was nothing of interest in the day session of the house, but the night session developed a hot debate upon pensions, on account of a Southern member raising the point of "no quorum" on a bill to pension General McClernand.

Saturday, Jan. 12.

Senators Teller, Lodge and Stuart spoke on the income tax bill, interjecting currency comments in liberal quantities.

In the house the bill to extend the original package law to oleomargerine caused a lively debate. Final action was deferred.

Monday, Jan. 14.

Hill, Gorman and Allison were the principal participants in the senate debate on the currency question. It was quite animated at times.

In the house filibustering tactics were resorted to to prevent consideration of the original package oleo bill.

DEBS ISSUES A MANIFESTO.

The Whole Judicial Proceedings Characterized as Infamous.

WOODSTOCK, Ills., Jan. 10.—E. V. Debs, George W. Howard, Sylvester Keliher, Lewis Rogers, William E. Burns, James Hogan and Leroy Goodwin are confined in the McHenry county jail. Unless the supreme court of the United States grants a writ of habeas corpus, which the defendants will ask for next week, Mr. Debs will continue here for six and the others three months.

Debs has issued a lengthy manifesto to the American people, in the course of which he says:

"In going to jail for participation in the late strike we have no apologies to make nor regrets to express. No ignominy attaches to us on account of this sentence.

"Candor compels me to characterize the whole proceeding as infamous. It is not calculated to revive the rapidly failing confidence of the American people in the federal judiciary. There is not a scrap of testimony to show that one of us violated any law whatsoever, and if we are guilty of conspiracy why are we punished for contempt. This question will continue to be asked with ever increasing emphasis. I would a thousand times rather be accountable for the strike rather than the decision."

Found Two More Bodies.

ALBANY, N. Y., Jan. 14.—Workmen at the Delevan house ruins spaded up two bodies, supposed to be of women. One of the bodies is thought to be that of Mrs. Hill, the housekeeper, and the other that of one of the linen girls.

My Wife is Nervous

Says many a man and too often he is inclined to blame the poor, tired woman who cannot eat or sleep, whose whole life is filled with misery because her blood has become impoverished and her nervous system exhausted. She needs a building up medicine like Hood's Sarsaparilla. A few bottles will enrich and vitalize her blood, tone and strengthen her digestive organs, give her a good appetite, enable her to sleep soundly, banish her nervousness and bring back her smiles. Mr. J. W. Roberson, of Greenfield, Tenn., says: "My wife began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla about three months ago and she is now taking her third bottle. She has been in poor health for fifteen years. Hood's Sarsaparilla is doing her more good than any other medicine she has ever taken. Her appetite is better, she looks better and there has been improvement in every way."

THE FARMERS' ALLIANCE.

Resolutions Adopted by the Annual Convention at Minneapolis.

MINNEAPOLIS, Jan. 10.—The State Farmers' Alliance elected the following officers:

President, J. I. Vermilyea of Dover.
Secretary, A. H. Hendrickson.
Treasurer, R. M. Prohstfield.
Lecturer, L. C. Long.
Executive Committee, First district, Thomas Meighen; Second, Peter McGrath; Third, Michael Helden; Fourth, S. W. Power; Fifth, Jonas H. Howell; Sixth, A. M. Still; Seventh, Dr. C. Johnson.

The resolutions adopted by the convention set forth:

That we have learned with great surprise and regret that the twine trust, with its millions of capital, proposes to secure from the present legislature an act to abolish the twine plant at Stillwater and leave the producers at the mercy of the ring.

That we demand of the legislature that it defeat any such action, and pass such laws as will increase the output of twine from the state factory.

That we deplore the action of the supreme court of this state in setting aside the statute passed by the last legislature, providing for the erection of the state elevator at Duluth, on the ground of incompetency.

That we are unequivocally opposed to the adoption of what is known as the "township system" for the common schools of Minnesota.

The resolutions further demanded that the legislature take action looking to the extermination of the Russian thistle; that all official salaries be reduced; that the pine land investigation should continue; that the government should issue all money and that the sale of bonds should cease; that the present system of grain inspection should be abolished; that mortgages should be taxable in the counties where recorded, and that the amount of mortgages should be deducted from the assessed value of property covered.

PEOPLES PARTY STATE LEAGUE.

An Organization Effected at the Minneapolis Meeting.

MINNEAPOLIS, Jan. 9.—The Populists, who gathered from all parts of the state to the number of almost 200, for the purpose of forming a permanent state league, were in session all day at Century Hall, and succeeded in drafting and adopting a constitution and electing officers.

The first business was the appointment of a committee to draft a constitution, after which adjournment was taken.

At the opening of the afternoon session the committee on constitution presented its report in full, which was acted upon section by section. The first section making the name "The People's Party State League," was adopted after some discussion, the understanding being that the old organization should merge into the new one.

J. M. Bowler was elected president, Swan Nelson vice president, and L. M. Ayers secretary.

Resolutions were passed to the effect that the present senatorial contest was not a Populist affair; that the league was opposed to any Republican because they all represented the money power, and that the Populist members of the legislature should put up some good Peoples party man and vote for him.

At the evening session E. W. Bonnum of Ramsey was elected treasurer and the vote for representatives on the executive committee resulted as follows:

First district, T. J. Mingham; second district, L. C. Long; Third district, C. N. Perkins; Fourth district, S. W. Powell; Fifth district, Dr. E. F. Clark; Sixth district, Daniel Cochran; Seventh district, E. C. Burl.

BEST MAN AT THE WEDDING.

Pat's Graphic Account of the Disastrous Mistake That He Made.

An Irish teamster asked for a half holiday for the purpose of attending his sister's wedding, and the request was granted. When he made his appearance the next morning, his right arm was in a sling, there was a plaster across his nose and a raw oyster in a poultice against his eye. His left ear looked like a cauliflower. "Why, Pat," said his employer, "I thought you were going to your sister's wedding? You look as though you had gone to a cyclone festival."

"I wor at th' weddin, sor," said Pat. "'Twas th' thruth I tould yez."

"Well, how did you get bunged up this way?" inquired the merchant.

"I'll tell yez, sor," replied Pat. "D'ye see, whin I got there and wint in th' people were standin forninst the priest, an be the side o' thim wor a man in a pintail coat and a big sphlatterin white shirt. I looked at um, an he looked at me. 'Oh, ho,' sez I till myself, sez I, 'an ye think yer a jewd!' Wuth thot I got a wee bit closer an looked at um wance moore. He gave a twist till his lip like and turned his back. 'No Gallagher ever took that,' sez I till meself agin, an I taps me laddiebuck on the showlder.

"'An who may yez be, ma bould buckoo?' sez I, feelin that the blood o' the Gallaghers had been insulted.

"'I'm the best mon,' sez he.

"'Th' best mon?' says I.

"'Thot's what I said,' sez he. 'Th' best mon,' an, sor," said Pat as he shifted the oyster on his eye, "he wuz."—New York Mail and Express.

An Early Bank Note.

The earliest bank note in the possession of the Bank of England is one dated Dec. 10, 1699, for £555. It is printed from an engraved plate, but it has blanks for the amount, date, number and signature. Across it are written memoranda showing that it was repaid in three installments. In appearance it is not altogether unlike the modern note. It is noticeable particularly that in the words, "For the Govr. and Compa.," the word "company" is thus abbreviated and not into "comp.," which would be more in accordance with the usual practice. In the bank library is another note for £25, which was not presented for 111 years. Another curiosity, said to be unique, is a note for no less than £1,000,000, dated 1782. Only four for such an amount have ever been issued.—Strand Magazine.

Not Today.

An English lady, traveling in New Zealand, waxes enthusiastic over the beauties of the country, especially in its mountainous parts. She tells a funny little story about the sharp witted driver of the public coach in which she made some of her expeditions.

At one point, where the steep road overhangs the river, Davis, the driver, always took the opportunity to lighten the load for his horses.

"Gentlemen," he would say in an insinuating tone, "the Prince of Wales always gets out and walks here."

It is to be presumed that he had usually found his "fares" quite ready to follow in the footsteps of so distinguished a predecessor, but one day a man, who had already heard the speech more than once, stole a march upon the wily Davis. The ground was wet, and the passenger was not in a mood for climbing, so as they approached the spot he anticipated the driver's hint by remarking:

"Davis, the Prince of Wales isn't going to walk today."—Youth's Companion.

The Sea Anemone.

The sea anemone resembles in shape a morning glory. Its mouth opens like the cup of that flower, and above it are seen a number of tentacles waving in the water. Its food consists of anything it can get, but generally it gets the minute insects that float in the sea. At any alarm it closes its cup and is then hardly distinguishable from the rock on which it is rooted. It has a set of sucker muscles that attach it so firmly to the rock that it will sometimes be torn in pieces rather than let go.

Using the Water.

Governess—I gave you a glass of water to wet your sponge in.

Little Boy—I'm using it.

"But you are spitting on the sponge."

"Yes'm. I drank the water so's to have it handy."—Good News.

The Season of Suicides.

Spring is the season for suicides as well as for sales. People prefer for this purpose, as statistics show, day to night and Monday, Tuesday or Wednesday to Saturday and Sunday.

In a word, suicides prefer the early part of the week, month and year. It would follow seemingly that anybody with a melancholic friend should look after him carefully on the first Monday in May.

Men kill themselves two, three or four times more often than women, except in Spain. Women generally "do it beautifully," men crudely.

Saxony is the most suicidal country in Europe, and the least so is—the "unhappy counthry!" Ireland's rate is 24 per 1,000,000 to Saxony's 469.—Westminster Gazette.

The Pope's Choir.

The finest choir in the world is that of St. Peter's, in Rome, known as the pope's choir. There is not a female voice in it, and yet the most difficult oratorios and sacred music are rendered in such a manner as to make one think that Adelina Patti is leading. The choir is composed of 60 boys. They are trained for the work from the time they get control of their vocal cords, and some of the best singers are not over 9 years old. At the age of 17 they are dropped from the choir.—Rome Letter.

THE state of South Dakota has gone bankrupt. No wonder—didn't Doc Fish go there a year or so ago? The only wonder is how it managed to last as long as it did.

THE Thirteen Towns, in its last issue, shows commendable enterprise in a fine write-up of Fosston. Editor Foss is keeping well to the front of the procession and deserves a liberal patronage and seems to be getting it.

YOUR uncle Loren would not object if lightning should strike in his vicinity. Fletcher is as shrewd a politician as grows in the state.

THE Minneapolis papers seem to be awfully afraid that Dave Clough will be governor of Minnesota! That is not the true milk in that cocoanut.

THE Minneapolis papers have let up on some of their personal abuse of Governor Nelson. That sort of thing was proving a sort of a boomerang that hurt their circulation.

SENATOR WASHBURN controls the caucus committee, and while he says a caucus will be held the last of the week we wonder, sometimes, if it really will? It will if the Washburn managers think that W. D. has the cinch.

SENATOR KELLAR is watching the current of events so as to be able to catch on to the band wagon—if the Dems don't trot out a senatorial candidate.

THE Japs are still ambitious to whip their big nighbor good and plenty. That great, awkward country has at last waked up sufficient to hire a German soldier to run their war business and the Japs better look a leedle oud pretty qvick right avay, or they will get left.

OUR new senator, P. M. Ringdal seems determined to make a reputation if nothing more. The first thing he did after he donned the senatorial toga was to move to dispense with the services of a chaplain and next he introduced a bill to abolish the office of oil inspector making the secretary of state responsible for its duties and all explosions etc. Great head that.

IF there is any better argument for the election of a Senator by the people by direct vote than is furnished by the present existing condition of things we dont know where you will find it. It seems to emphasize the demand that has been made most emphatically.

THE SENATORIAL CAUCUS.

The caucus committee met on Monday evening and decided to hold the senatorial caucus on Friday evening. The Minneapolis Evening Journal, while claiming that Washburn had a majority in the caucus says that in all probability the caucus will not settle the question.

SENATORIAL QUESTION.

This is the way the Warren Register views the senatorial contest.

"There are now four avowed candidates for the seat occupied by Senator Washburn, with several dark horses in prospect. Sen. Washburn and Gov. Nelson are the two leading candidates, and the contest between them promises to be a bitter one. Both are able men and shrewd politicians, and both have men of great tact and boundless resources in charge of their interests in this fight. If neither Nelson nor Washburn can secure the caucus nomination on the first ballot, the senatorial plum will be very likely to go to Comstock, McCleary or a dark horse. The senatorial complication is very unfortunate, as it may engender feuds that will plague and embarrass the Republican party for many years to come even if it does not seriously imperil their prospects of future triumphs.

DISGRUNTLED.

W. G. Hunt came in from McIntosh on Thursday and took the train for Fertile where he was interested in a law-suit. Hunt is disgruntled at the division situation and is doing a lot of kicking about it. He does not like the way he has been ignored in the deal, the way McIntosh has been used nor in fact anything in the entire deal. He says the new five county plan will carry, "because," says he, "there are enough people living in the villages that are designated as county seats, added to the five sets of officers to make a majority of all the votes." W. G. is mad because Columbia county was defeated, is mad because the new deal left him out of it, is mad because the new deal, if it should happen to win would leave the new counties altogether too small for the best interests of all concerned and the only grain of comfort he can extract from it all is in the fact that "Crookston would be ruined by it." That is a great principle—well worthy of Hunt. Because his pet plans were defeated last fall he desires revenge upon Crookston, and to obtain it he is willing that every taxpayer in Polk county shall suffer annually for all time. This is a sample of the motives that are behind this division movement all the way around. It is simon pure selfishness without regard to the best interests of the people. All who favor division have some selfish purpose at heart.

J. J. Hill started last week for a trip to England and stopped in Washington for a few days. It is reported that he called upon president Cleveland and protested vigorously against the appointment of W. M. Campbell as Marshal of Minnesota and the Washington dispatches have the following to say in relation to the appointment:

"WASHINGTON, JAN. 14.—The senate judiciary committee had the nomination of W. M. Campbell for the marshalship of Minnesota up for consideration for a moment at today's regular meeting. In view of the absence of Senator Washburn, the committee decided to postpone action on the matter for one week. It cannot be learned from any member of the committee whether or not James J. Hill has requested that Campbell be defeated for confirmation.

Future of Farming.

(St. Paul Dispatch.)

An article appeared yesterday in the St. Paul Globe over the signature of Oliver Dalrymple, which must be regarded, all things considered, as one of the most valuable contributions made of late to the literature of agriculture in the northwest. Every farmer in this and adjacent states should have it placed at his disposal.

The day of high prices for the great cereal of the northwest has gone by, and its successful cultivation is now a problem which will require a highter degree of intelligent industry than has been expended on it in the past. The causes and consequences, as set forth in Mr. Dalrymple's article, and that should be understood and appreciated by those whom they most immediately concern, is a matter of the greatest public importance.

The growth and development of the Northwest has been due in greater measure to the abundant wheat crop than to aught else. Soil and climate alike have been peculiarly adapted to that crop, and the valuable market which awaited the cerial in the past made its cultivation profitable to the exclusion almost of all other products.

If, as Mr. Dalrymyle suggests, wheat, like corn, must find its way to market on hoof, that circumstance of itself will go futher than all that has heretofore been urged to promote the principle of diversified farming. The circumstance is not unlikely to result in a substantial increase within a few seasons of the wealth and prosperity of this section.

The one features of Mr. Dalryumple's views which possesses the greatest force and importance is that wherein he calls attention to the superior position occupied by the farmer. Under the leadership of the demagogue politician the American farmer has been restless and ill-satisfied with his lot. It needed, perhaps, the sad experience of the country for the past two years in its industry and commercial interests to bring the American farmer to his senses. The Dispatch has more than once called attention to exceptionally fortunate situation of the farmer through the prevailing depression. If now he can lay aside the teachings of his addle-headed political advisers and take to heart the lessons laid down by Mr. Dalrymple, which his own experience as well as that of his fellow citizens of every calling and condition has so severely emphasized for many months past, we may well expect to see an early close brought to the pernicious occupation of the agrarian agitator.

Public Health Services.

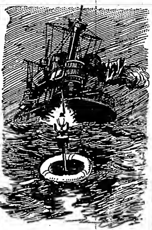
From "The Progress of the World" in the January Review of Reviews.

Whatever then should prove to be the merits of this alleged cure for diphtheria, there can be no mistake in the policy of public cleanliness and of constantly improved health administration. Our American cities come short of their European contemporaries in most points of municipal organization and service. Fortunately, in the matter of public health work, we have less to be ashamed of than in almost any other particular. There have been some scandals in the health department of New York City, but there has been very much to commend. All that is needed to bring our American municipal health administration up to a point of scientific and practical efficiency equal to that of the very best managed foreign cities, is a reform of our municipal government in general respects. The work of health boards is necessarily hampered at many points by the existence of corruption, of spoils methods, and of ignorance and inefficiency, in other departments of city government.

The frontispiece of the January Review of Reviews is a portrait of Robert Louis Stevenson; the same number contains another picture of the late novelist—a sketch from life by that clever illustrator, Victor Gribayedoff There are also portraits of Professor Roux, Mackenzie Bowel, Sir John Thompson, Dean Hole, the Sultan of Turkey, the Princess Bismarck and other prominent personages.

An Electric Lighted Life Buoy.

The latest thing in buoys is one with an electric light on top and a water tight basket filled with food. The light is supplied by a storage battery, which maintains it 24 hours, and by an automatic arrangement the light blazes forth as soon as the buoy strikes the water. It is the invention of Captain Miller of the German navy, and his idea is that when a man falls overboard the buoy is to be thrown over at once. He can see it in the night, and if he reaches it and boats cannot be launched he can hang on and live for days if necessary.



THE NEW BUOY.

Can't Leave Paris.

Zola wants to come to the United States, but dreads the voyage. He would like to see foreign countries, but looks with horror on the worry and annoyance of getting to them. If he could see the United States without several months' absence from Paris, he admits that he would like it, but to leave Paris for any long time, he thinks, would almost break his heart. Zola was born in Paris in 1840 and had many trying experiences before succeeding in literature. He worked awhile on the docks as a common laborer at $12 per month and thought himself fortunate when he got a position in the Hachette publishing house at $20. He is now one of the most popular and prosperous novelists in the world.

How Tawney Sees It.

Congressman Tawney must have been visiting with his eyes shut when in Minnesota recently. He is quoted as saying:

"The impression when I left Minnesota was that Washburn would be elected. I believe that he will show up pretty strong on the first ballot and be the choice of the caucus on the second. I do not say there is no danger of a dead-lock, but I don't apprehend that there will be one. My trip to Minnesota was more for the purpose of helping some of the boys in my district to secure places in the legislature than to take any part in the senatorial contest."

Home Life of John Burns.

From character sketch of John Burns by Robert Donald, in the January Review of Reviews.

Mr. Burns lives in one of the principal streets of Battersea, at 108 Lavender Hill. The street is partly commercial, partly residential. It contains the principal local institutions—the town hall, the free library and John Burns. Until recently Burns only occupied two rooms in the basement of the house. But since he has been in parliament he has added two rooms on the first floor, but the modest character of the lodgment may be judged by the fact that the rent is only 11 shillings ($2.75) per week. Mrs. Burns makes an excellent housewife. She springs from the working classes, like her husband, but, like him, has learned a great deal. She writes well and talks well, and without participating in her husband's public work, is in complete sympathy with him and is very helpful to him in many ways. They have no family—indeed, Burns declares himself a neo-Malthusian. The Burns tenement is well furnished and is kept scrupulously clean. Ever since he was a boy Burns has been collecting and reading books. His little den is lined with books and documents, carefully arranged. You will find there all the leading economic works, histories, blue-books, a marvelous collection of labor pamphlets, and many works in French, which Burns understands. American literature is represented by labor bureau reports. One side of the room is occupied with a large glass case, which was once used by a geologist, but instead of accommodating fossils, it now contains ammunition for aggressive labor campaigning. Here we find clippings, reports, etc., carefully tabulated under various headings, such as "Sweating," "Direct Labor in the Provinces," "Bogus Organizations," "Profit-Sharing Schemes," "Co-operation," "Strikes and Lock-outs," "Labor Leaders," etc. He has, by the way, a complete record of all the trade unionist and labor leaders; and rather dangerous material it proves against those whom it may be directed. Apart from studying the particular books which are helpful to him in his public work, Burns is fond of reading historical and philosophical books, and occasionally dips into works of current literature. As for recreations, he is fond of cricket, skating and other out-door games and tries to maintain his healthy mind in a healthy body.

The Nicaragua Canal.

From "The Progress of the World," in the January Review of Reviews.

One of the first questions to secure a hearing upon the reassembling of Congress in December, was that of the status of the much-buffeted Nicaragua canal project. The canal has a staunch and patriotic defender in Senator Morgan. To speak in general terms, and not to enter here upon the discussion of details, it would seem a clear proposition that the political and financial authority and control of the United States government ought to dominate the affairs of the Nicaragua canal. It is true that Nicaragua is not a portion of the United States; and yet in a very important sense any deep-water channel across Central America would constitute a most essential part of our national coast line. England's interest in the Suez canal on account of her hold upon India has a very shadowy validity in the nature of things, when compared with the propriety of a full control by the United States of the Nicaragua canal. For, after all, India is a great Asiatic empire pertaining in no way to the integrity of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and probably destined in the early future to resume the autonomy which British conquest has suspended. The control of the Nicaragua canal might better be compared with that of the Irish channel as forming an essential route between parts of one sovereign state.

What will be Done by the United States in Turkey?

From "The Armenian Crisis," in the January Review of Reviews.

What will be done? Nothing, until the president and congress are assured in unmistakable terms, by the press and pulpit, by mass meetings, deputations, petitions and personal communications, that the American people desire, 1, a larger and more efficient Consular service in the interior to secure to American citizens the safety of their persons and property, and their engaging without interference in lawful pursuits; 2, such an attitude on the part of the United States Minister, as will guard the honor of his country and secure her just demands; and, 3, such a friendly but significant protest from congress, through the president, to the Sultan, as will leave the latter in no doubt as to the feeling of the American people in regard to the massacre. A well-known principle of international law justifies interference "where the general interests of humanity are infringed by the excesses of a barbarous and despotic government." The United States has repeatedly acted on this principle. May I remind them of what America owes to Lafayette, who was not an American, and quote the words of Lowell, whom America is proud to honor as a diplomat and a man?

"He's true to God who's true to man; wherever wrong is done
To the humblest and the weakest, 'neath the all-beholding sun,
That wrong is also done to us; and they are slaves most base
Whose love of right is for themselves, and not for all their race."

Admitted at the WORLD'S FAIR
CHICAGO
1893

Why Was I

that Ayer's Sarsaparilla, out of the gre number of similar preparations manufa tured throughout the world, was the on medicine of the kind admitted at th World's Fair, Chicago? And why was that, in spite of the united efforts of th manufacturers of other preparations, th decision of the World's Fair Directors w not reversed?

BECAUSE

According to RULE 15—"Articles that are in any way dangerous or offensive, also patent medicines, nostrums, and empirical preparations, whose ingredients are concealed, will not be admitted to the Exposition," and, therefore—

Because Ayer's Sarsaparilla is not a patent medicine, not a nostrum, and not a secret preparation.

Because its proprietors had nothing to conceal when questioned as to the formula from which it is compounded.

Because it is all that it is claimed to be—a Compound Concentrated Extract of Sarsaparilla, and in every sense, worthy the indorsement of this most important committee, called together for passing upon the manufactured products of the entire world.

Now is the time to subscribe for the JOURNAL so as to secure the opening chapter of "Chicamauga," our new serial story soon to commence. See prospectus elsewhere.

The county board has instructed Henry Nolan to go ahead and fix up the Carman bridge on Broadway. He will put it in first-class condition as promptly as it can be done.

Forty-four persons united with the Congregational church at Little Falls on Sunday last. Such a landslide up this way would be considered something like miraculous.

I. U. Jennings will dispense justice at his store on Broadway—at least until the next city election. He was appointed justice of the peace to fill out L. E. Gossman's unexpired term.

John Lester, while engaged in his duties at the Model laundry on second street one day last week had a finger badly crushed which will lay him up for repairs for some time to come.

The Congregational church has extended a call to Rev. Mr. Fisher to become its regular pastor. The formal invitation was given to-day and Mr. Fisher will give his answer at an early date.

Emily Bancker, in her new play entitled "Our Flats" appears at the opera house on Wednesday evening Jan. 23d. This is said to be an excellent play, one of the most interesting on the road.

"The County Fair" at the Grand on Monday evening, was greeted by a full house and was pronounced one of the finest plays presented here for a good while. As a rule a good play is well patronized in this city.

Charlie Vine opened a new meat market on Second street on Monday in the stand recently vacated by Pete Tibersar and is now ready to greet his old customers whenever they need anything in his line.

Geo. Ralph has secured another surveying contract on the reservation which will take from 60 to 90 days to complete. He ought to know where all the good land is by the time he is through with his surveying jobs up there.

A goodly number of young folks drove out to the residence of Wm. Himmelsbach in Fairfax on Monday evening for an evening's visit under that hospitable roof, returning at an early hour Tuesday morning. They report having a grand good time.

T. A. Harris and Albert went down to Twin Valley on Sunday evening to be ready to move Losey & Buckingham.s big safe into their new bank building. They successfully performed the job on Monday returning on Tuesday morning.

The wife of Senator Hansbrough, of North Dakota, died in Washington on Sunday, of pneumonia. She has been ill a great deal during the time Mr. H, has been in Washington and her death is not a matter of great surprise to her friends.

The folly of prejudice is frequently shown by people who prefer to suffer for years rather than try an advertised remedy. The millions who have no such notions, take Ayer's Sarsaparilla for blood diseases and are cured. So much for common sense.

Many of our citizens who have occasion to use steam are burning the chips from the planing mill that can be had for 50 cents per load. Felix Fournet and T. H. Bjoln also use the stuff for heating purposes in their brick blocks. It is said to be all right for such purposes.

The sugar-coating, which makes Ayer's pills so easy to take, dissolves immediately on reaching the stomach, and so permits the full strength and benefit of the medicine to be promptly communicated. Ask your druggist for Ayer's almanac, just out.

Frank Hawkins says that hay is selling in Maine for $16 per ton. What would our people think if they had to pay that price for hay? Even with hay at the price it can be had for here there are many who think they can not make money in butter!

J H. Bjoln is doing his best to cater to the wants of an amusement loving public by way of dramatic entertainments. The two he had this week are among the best plays going. Then he has Emily Bancker in "Our Flat" for the 23d inst. and one of Frohman's best plays for Feb. 7th.

J. F. Hawkins and family returned on Saturday morning from a two months visit with relatives in Maine. Frank says that business is picking up down there "but" said he, "if we had the shops and factories up here that they have down there you would see far more business done than they do and a far better country than they have. We have that now, and if we only had a few of their manufacturing facilities we would be out of sight up here. They have more snow down there than we have and pretty snug winter weather."

Before you subscribe for a county paper call and see what inducements the POLK COUNTY JOURNAL can offer you. Our premium list is a valuable one to select from. You want the county news and we want your influence.

"Charlie's Aunt," as presented at the Grand on Tuesday evening was highly enjoyed by one of the largest audiences that has greeted a company for some time. The play was a comical skit and very well put on. The music was "out of sight."

O. H. Myran, of Ada, is one of the most interested observers of the senatorial fight in St. Paul, just now. It is said that Myran has a bet of $500 with Marcus Johnson, by the terms of which Myran will win that sum if W. D. don't make the riffle—and lose if he does.

The grand jury got down to business on Tuesday morning in great shape. Judge Ives seems to be determined to punish certain kinds of lawlessness without fear or favor and in that sentiment the better element of the community will most heartily concur.

Martin Losey Jr. informs THE JOURNAL that they now have everything in readiness at Twin Valley to begin business in the new bank. Have one of the finest offices that could be imagined and a better safe than they have could not be found anywhere in any country bank. We hope the boys will do well.

If any of our readers have failed to get satisfactory profits from horses, cattle, sheep, swine, poultry, bees, fruits, grain or vegetables, they should commence at once and read every number of the Farm, Stock & Home during the coming year. A singular accident was that which happened to Will Bugg on Tuesday. He had previously prepared some white-wash, of lime and water, and was stirring it when an explosion took place and Bugg got a dose of lime-water in his face that completely spoils his beauty for a few days. Fortunately his eyes escaped.

Andrew Opheim was up from Fertile on Thursday. Andrew has developed into a genuine division boomer since Fertile has pretentions for a county seat. Last fall Andrew thought that a division into four parts would make each part too small, now he seems to think a division into five parts would be about right.

A number of the male friends of Comrade Louis Fontaine invaded his domicile on Friday evening of last week—the occasion being his 55th birth-day anniversary. It was a perfect surprise to Louis, having been planned by Mrs. F. for that very purpose, and most admirably did she succeed. A very enjoyable time was had.

No farmer in this country should fail to take his local paper and at least one agricultural journal. No matter how many papers he is now getting his list should not be considered complete if it does not contain the POLK COUNTY JOURNAL and that excellent agricultural paper, the Farm, Stock and Home, published at Minneapolis, Minn., both of which can be had one year for the small sum of $1.50. [36-40]

Col Gorgas is a proud man. Last week he received from Col. Cundy, (who by the way is well posted on thoroughbred dogs) a pedigree of his dog Ben. Now the Col. never did have the least little doubt that Ben's blood was the bluest of the blue—but to make others believe it—that was the rub and was what was disturbing the Col's naturally equable temperament—he longed to prove by the documents that Ben traced way back to old English kennels—that Ben's aunts-sisters actually crossed the briny deep in the Mayflower, landing on Plymouth Rock making of Ben a regular Thanksgiving dog and entitling him to all the honors there is in that fact--so the Col. procured the pedigree of Ben which amply proves all of the above aforesaid—or something else we are undecided what.

Miss Emily Bancker and her company of players will be at the Grand on Wednesday night of the coming week, presenting a new musical farce comedy called "Our Flat." Two young people fall in love and marry each other without the consent of the girl's father, who, of course, refuses his blessing, likewise his pocket book. They commence housekeeping in debt, in very good style, on the top floor of a flat, but get into horrible debt trying to keep up appearances. The husband, a writer of tragedies, finds it impossible to get a play accepted, when the young wife attempts something in the playwriting line herself, but very wisely sticks to "comedy." She writes a play which is accepted and produced at a leading theater by a most successful manager. The manager is expected to call at the flat in regard to the play, when the furniture people, who have not received their payment, suddenly appear and remove everything. Nothing daunted, the young wife improvises some very handsome furniture out of empty boxes and kitchen utensils, with the aid of a few remaining draperies and curtains, and has her home the picture of prosperity when the great man is announced. The situations are grotesque and amusing to the last degree.

HOW TO DEAL WITH MOBS.

The Remedy Is in the Power of the Troops, but Is Most Terrible.

The new tactics of the army and navy contain a very complete street riot drill. One of the most serious difficulties with which an armed force has to contend in dealing with rioters is an enfilading fire from windows, housetops and cross streets.

The commanding officer has the power to send out scouts in citizens' clothes, who may be provided with signaling apparatus. These men may occupy housetops or other vantage ground and keep the commander informed of the points at which rioters are massed. Troops need not be brought to the scene in column, nor is there any necessity of making a futile effort to deploy as skirmishers. The unit of formation for the street riot drill is the hollow square, and it may be employed in company, battalion or even brigade. The advantage of the hollow square is that it provides for an all around fire.

The front line attends to the street ahead of it. The right flank of the square directs its fire at the windows and tops of houses on the left side of the street, and the left flank at those on the right. The rear line acts as a rear guard, throwing out in rear of the advancing column a semicircle of men, who direct their fire to the rear and sides as it may be needed. The hollow square can be marched by either flank or to the rear, just as a column can be. The officers are inside the square.

If the advancing column is harassed by mobs in the cross streets, there is a simple and effective way of dealing with such obstructions. The platoons or sections of the leading company wheel to the right and left, and the rear rank extends in double time to the right of the front rank. This will make a line long enough to extend across a very broad street. The commander may then order these sections to open fire or to charge bayonets, and thus the cross streets can be cleared. In the meantime the remainder of the column continues its march along the original street, and the leading company, having finished its work in the cross street, reforms as the rear company of the body.

Artillery is of course advantageously employed by placing it inside the square and unmasking it where needed by opening out the front or rear line or the flankers. Following these tactics would entail a frightful loss of life, so they are kept as a last resort. They have never yet been entirely followed.

How to Pack Flowers For the Mail.

Delicate opening sprays can be packed so that they will remain quite fresh two days and two nights. They should always be mailed in the evening and cut in the dark when free from the sunshine of the day. Cut the stems as long as possible, and then, before the moisture has had time to escape, lightly dip the end of each stem in melted wax. Wet some cotton wadding and wrap it in a big wet mass around the stems, letting only a thin layer cover the flowers themselves.

Around the cotton wrap a big piece of tin foil, taking care that it does not press upon the flowers. Line the box with some crumpled newspaper, well moistened. When the nosegay is in and the cover on, take as stiff a piece of brown paper as you can find and paste stripe of it around the box wherever the air is liable to get in, for the flowers to carry well must be kept airtight. Then wrap the box in paper and tie.

With a thin cracker box and a little cotton the work of packing is nothing, for the tin keeps out the air, so that neither tin foil nor pasting is necessary.

How to Prepare Chicken Cutlets.

When the white meat of chickens has been used for salads or for some company dish, the legs will make a delightful dish of cutlets. Separate the first and second joints and simmer until tender in water flavored with soup vegetables. Put the joints in press between two flat dishes, with a weight on top, and when cold trim them neatly into the shape of cutlets. Dip in egg and bread crumbs and fry a golden brown. A really handsome dish may be made of these by placing balls of mashed and fried potatoes, cauliflower boiled and broken into florets or canned peas in the center, the cutlets around, and a cream sauce poured over all.

WOMEN AND THE BALLOT.

A Claim That Without It They Can Exert Influence at the Polls.

Mrs. Eleonora Kinnicutt of New York, who is not a suffragist, but who has accomplished important legislation for the benefit of the city, has a suggestive article in The Century, in which she says:

Now that the New York constitutional convention of 1894 has refused to recommend that the word "male" be stricken from the constitution of the state, a dispassionate word on the subject may perhaps find a gracious hearing on both sides. Many of the women who opposed the introduction of woman suffrage differed from those who advocated it more in premises than in conclusions. In the heat of debate many misunderstood and misjudged each other, because they were arguing from different standpoints. One took the side of abstract right; the other of concrete reasons. One called the present condition of women slavery; the other termed the proposed condition enslavement. But upon two points most women were agreed; that the politics of the country, as now managed solely by men, offers a wide field for experiment and improvement, and that, whatever share in the affairs of the state women ask to have given to them, it is the desire of none to sacrifice to it the duties that are distinctively feminine.

Universal man suffrage is here to stay. We cannot do away with the evils that accompany it; we must therefore try to overcome them, rejoicing all the while that the great experiment is being made in a country where the chances are in favor of success. And what better way is there of making this success apparent and permanent than by the intelligent and public spirited women of the country, through their good judgment and watchfulness, helping the intelligent and public spirited men to hold their own against the strength of mere numbers—a task that is daily increasing in difficulty? If women will only assume, at election times, the responsibility of making the men of their households register and vote, and of guarding, as far as possible, against carelessness and indifference in the matter, they will render a valuable service to the state.

If the vote of the present day were to be doubled by opening the sluice gates to all women, we could directly divide it into four parts; the educated men and the educated women; the ignorant men and the ignorant women (the word "ignorant" seems best to represent the perverso and the unlettered). Why are we not distinctly better off—looking at the question still from a numerical standpoint, and never forgetting for a moment that our government is, as Dr. Jacobi clearly emphasizes, a "government by public opinion"—if, by uniting the vote and the influence of the two higher groups, we make the hard struggle not a struggle of two against two, but of two against one?

The suffragists assert that women will not take part in public affairs unless they are rewarded with the franchise. This is a statement that women, by their disinterested, impersonal work in every direction, are daily contradicting. What they do need, before in number they become the political helpmates of men, is the conviction that they can learn to be helpful, and that their help is needed in the body politic. This they have never been taught seriously. And when they set to work to find out how they can best make themselves useful, they will discover that it is only by a mastery of hard, dry facts, and by the onward propelling power of disinterested effort, that men in politics attain the best results. The so called "coaxing" and "wheedling" power of women, supposed to be in such force and favor with men, and sometimes used as an ill natured taunt by one kind of woman to another kind, is an overestimated power. Men can usually be coaxed into giving away only that which they themselves do not value. The occasion of a first conference between two of opposite sex may be marked by grace and graciousness, but after that a woman must depend, as do men among men, upon the merits of her cause and the practical knowledge and good sense that she is able to bring to its support. Almost every woman who interests herself in public affairs and has had experience with officers of government and men of personal influence will corroborate this statement. She will gladly confess, too, that the more she works the more she learns that her own best strength lies in the strength of the object that she has at heart. She will win or fail, too, just in proportion to her ability and the single mindedness of purpose with which she keeps this object in view.

A Registration Incident.

During the last registration in this city there were a great many pleasantries reeled off at the expense of women who for the first time took the initiative in the suffrage business. One of the actual happenings has just been told. It was a case of tables turned. The mistress, a woman of social distinction, presented herself for enrollment. The man who asked her the necessary questions did so with more of the airy than was his wont. He asked her name with judicial abruptness. Place of residence, birth, time in the county and state, etc., were run down with almost cruel firmness. After she had gone there was a trifle more color in her lips than usual. The man who had questioned her was her coachman.—Chicago Tribune.

A Worthy Example.

At the outdoor sports in which the students at our women's colleges indulge, there are no such rough manners, savage struggles or horse play as there are at those in which the students at men's colleges indulge. The stalwart young fellows of Princeton and Yale would gain instruction by observing the athletic sports and games of the gentle young damsels of Wellesley and Vassar and Smith. We don't want the boys to be girls, or the girls to be boys, but we desire that the boys shall be not less regardful of the amenities than are their sisters.—New York Sun.

TAKE LIFE BRAVELY.

DEPEND UPON YOURSELF AND NOT UPON YOUR FRIENDS.

If You Don't Live Within Your Income, Some One Else Must Pay, Says Rev. Madison C. Peters—Success Does Not Come to Dreamers, but to Workers.

Text.—Joshua i, 7, "Be strong, very courageous; observe the law; turn not from it to the right hand nor to the left, that thou mayest have a good success."

Life is a solemn thing. Beside it death is a trifle. Words refuse to tell how much life means, because they cannot. The very doorway of life is hung around with flowery emblems to indicate that there are prizes for every successful worker and crowns for those who fight a good fight and finish their course with joy. Life is a gift of God. It is not a fitful, fantastic extravaganza, but a real and an earnest, essential, awful affair.

Take it like a man. Let it be to you the preparatory school of the college life of heaven. Act as if the world had waited for your coming. Live so that the world will be sorry for your going out of it. Do your best to bring the world to a realization of the truest ideal of nobleness and blessedness.

Enter upon that calling in life to which your peculiar genius inclines. Engage in no business in which you would enrich yourself at the sacrifice of conscience and the blessing of heaven. Follow that pursuit which will challenge the respect of your fellow man. Awaken your latent forces and invoke the benediction of heaven upon your best conceived and best sustained endeavors, and the probabilities are in your favor that you will succeed. Do what you do in obedience to the apostolic injunction with all your might. Don't slight your work, however humble it may be. Too many young men remember only that they have a salary to draw and forget that there are duties to perform. Be not content with doing your work average well. Do it indispensably well, and tomorrow you will be called higher, and thence higher still.

The heads of many of our business firms today—a few years ago when boys—swept the stores. Their love of their work was what the soft evening wind is to the strings of an Æolian harp. Their lives were psalms, and every day's duties well done lighted up the future with the inspiration of success. Industry is the philosopher's stone that turns into gold all that it touches. One of the mottoes on the walls of the Delphian temple ascribed to Periander, one of the seven wise men of Greece, was, "Nothing is impossible to industry." Ninety-nine per cent of what the world calls luck is nothing but the talent for hard work. Good luck is good pluck. Do not, like Micawber, wait for things to turn up. Go and turn up things yourself.

Do not with folded arms call on Hercules. Thine own arms are the demigod. You cannot dream yourself into success. You must roll up your sleeves, hammer and forge it.

If you would have the world respect you, be strong, be stalwart, be iron sided, eaglelike, scream defiance as you rise and strike your pinions against the wings of the whirlwind.

Be firm. One constant element of luck
Is genuine, solid old Teutonic pluck.
Stick to your aim, the mongrel's hold will slip,
But only crowbars loose the bulldog's grip.
Small though he looks, the jaw that never yields
Drags down the bellowing monarch of the fields.

Concentrate your mind and energy upon one work. The human mind is like a burning glass whose rays are intense only as they are concentrated. What more powerless than clouds of scattered steam as they rise into the sky? But concentrated and condensed they pierce the solid rock. With irresistible force thunder trains across the continent and rids vast vessels o'er waves mountain high in safety to distant shores.

"This one thing I do" made Paul the most successful man that ever trod the earth since God first sent it circling round the sun.

Don't dabble in too many things. Beware of outside operations. Charles Dickens said, "Whatever I have devoted myself to I have devoted myself to it completely." Be persevering. Victory is in pushing on. When Antisthenes refused to take Diogenes as a student, annoyed at Diogenes' persistence, he lifted his staff to strike him, when Diogenes exclaimed: "Strike. You have not a staff hard enough to conquer my perseverence." That quality in a man will do anything that can be done.

Be independent. Do not cling to your friends like the ivy to the oak.

"Go to the ant, thou sluggard! Consider her ways and be wise," saith Solomon. Not to the aunt or other rich mischievous friends, who are getting you out of every scrape into which your improvidence throws you, and thus be always getting into scrapes and never learn how to get yourself out.

Be economical, but shun meanness. Pay as you go. Debt neutralizes a man's energies, takes the bloom of youth from his cheeks, peace from his pillow and slumber from his eyelids.

If you don't live within your income, you must live upon the income of some one else.

Religion is your only safeguard. Every other influence will be only as the green withes with which the treacherous Delilah endeavored to bind the Hebrew giant. They will snap like threads in the whirlwind of passion or shrivel like tow before the fires of temptation.

You cannot afford to live in sin. Godliness is profitable. Sin is expensive. Come under the beatitudes of God's love, and your life will be "like a tree planted beside the rivers of water whose leaves also shall not wither, and look whatsoever thou doest shall prosper."

Grasp the proffered hand of Christ. Walk the dangerous path of life with this friend of friends and sooner can the heavens fall than your life fail.

MADISON C. PETERS.

The New Diphtheria Cure.

The medical faculty of England and Germany have warmly approved of the blood serum cure for diphtheria invented by Professor Behring of Halle. The results are reported as wonderful, for, while under the regular treatment one patient in three died, under this only one in 40 has so far died, and it is estimated that the discovery will save 150,000 lives per year in Germany and Austria alone. The system is to inoculate the blood of animals by slow degrees, the goat being the best subject, till the animal's system generates an antitoxine, and then the blood is injected into the veins of the patient.

Columbia College's New Library.

Columbia college, the famous seat of learning founded in 1754, is about to remove to a more roomy location in the upper part of New York city. The site covers ten acres, and upon it the college authorities expect to ultimately erect handsome buildings costing nearly $3,000,000. The proposed library building is to be the principal structure of the group, and the plans and specifications call for an expenditure of $750,000. The building will be of a classic style of architecture, suggesting the Pantheon, and the grand entrance, 325 feet wide, will somewhat resemble the entrance to the capitol at Washington. The building will be capped by a dome rising 300 feet above the Hudson river. Near the proposed library's site are the Grant monument and the new Cathedral of St. John the Divine.

Sweden's Hero King.

Dec. 9, 1894, was the three hundredth anniversary of the birth of Gustavus Adolphus, hero king of Sweden, and was therefore celebrated as a festival day in all northern Europe. He was the great champion of Protestantism in the horrible Thirty Years' war, and was killed at the battle of Lutzen, Nov. 6, 1632, but not till he had raised Sweden to a very high position in Europe. He became king at 17, finding his country involved in war, yet brought her triumphantly through all her troubles. Napoleon compared him to Hannibal, these two being the warriors who achieved the greatest results with small means.

Cassins Clay Jones of Rockford, Ills., adjutant general of the G. A. R., was born May 3, 1845, in Seneca Falls, N. Y., and volunteered in the naval service as soon as he was old enough. After the war he entered the employ of the Boston and Albany railroad, but in 1867 went to Rockford and became bookkeeper and cashier in a large general store. Later he became a banker and has long been known as one of the most expert accountants in the west.

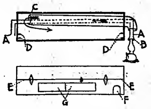
HOMEMADE BROODER.

It Costs Little and Answers Every Purpose.

Not being satisfied with the result of my experience with brooders of different kinds, and with the impression that neither top nor bottom heat exclusively was the correct principle, I decided that I would make one which was nearer my idea of what a brooder should be.

As I had no old boards or boxes, I bought two large sized bootboxes very cheap, which were about four feet long, one foot deep and nearly two wide.

One box I carefully knocked apart so as not to split the boards, and the other one was left open on one side. Then I covered it all over the outside with some old felt paper, such as is used under carpets, and nailed the boards of the other box outside, so that I had double walls all around.



A HOMEMADE BROODER.

I then bought enough 2 inch tin pipe (A) and two elbows to extend through the box and had a small cone shaped piece soldered at B to allow the lamp chimney to sit up in under; also one elbow and enough 4 inch pipe to extend within about four to six inches of the opposite end of the box (C) and fastened to the top of the box.

Two small cleats were nailed to each end inside (D), 1½ and 3 inches above the bottom of the box to support the tray.

Fig. 2 represents the front of brooder, which is made by nailing two boards together, with paper between, and is then split clear across a little above the center (E), the top part being nailed to the box and a pair of hinges fastened to hold lower part, which is the door.

The mark F is a small hole about three inches each way to allow the chicks to pass in and out to the run.

One or two small pieces of glass can be fastened in door G to give light to inside of brooder. A tray made of light boards forms the movable floor, which can be cleaned in less time than it takes to tell it by opening the door and pulling out the tray and turning it over.

When the chicks are first put in, the tray rests upon the top cleats, and as they grow larger the tray can be lowered to allow them to pass under the 4 inch pipe. This gives neither top nor bottom heat exclusively, but a uniform temperature throughout and does not require a hover.

The cold air passes in through the large pipe and is heated before it gets into the brooder proper, and as the opening is at the same end (F) there is a continuous circulation, but no strong draft. The cooler air, which is always at the bottom, is forced out, as the opening in door is always open, and the chicks can pass in and out at their own sweet pleasure.

The 2 inch pipe at A should turn down, as it retains the heat better than when turned up and prevents the strong draft. If you like the idea, try it.

A small can of water placed in the brooder, so the evaporation will keep the air from becoming too dry, will be of advantage. It should be set near the top, so chicks cannot get into the water. —Dr. N. H. Edwards in Western Garden.

Breeding and Raising.

This breeder may or may not be a successful raiser. If he is not, the probability is he will not stay in the ranks many years, but will throw up the business in disgust. The fraternity misses such a man. The successful raiser is the man who is in a position to make money out of the poultry business, and he does. He probably could and perhaps does raise pure bred fowls. If he does and is not a scientific breeder, he seldom raises anything of particular note unless by some chance mating. Yet he can make the business pay, for, aside from those that he realizes from $1 to $2.50 each for, he has a lot he can sell at the market price to help fill his wallet, and there is a good chance of his staying in the business, be it in thoroughbreds or in crossbreds for market alone.

Keep Hens Scratching.

Fowls kept in artificially heated houses are more apt to contract colds than otherwise. After having heated their bodies they of a sudden go outdoors to meet a temperature a good many degrees colder. In this the scratching shed does noble work. It is a good "go between," gradually introducing the poultry to the change. The shed being possibly 10 degrees colder than the roosting pen, it likewise is 10 degrees warmer than the outside temperature. Certainly this gradual change is less dangerous than a sudden exposure to 20 degrees colder.

If the scratching shed is under the same roof with the roosting pen, which it should be, a muslin door can be fastened in front, which, during inclement weather, can be kept closed.

The Poultry Fancier.

The genuine fancier, the man who loves his birds, says The Poultry Monthly, the man who stands among them and watches them every time he has a chance, the man who prefers the company of his birds to that of the crowd at the corner grocery or saloon, the man who is ever looking to their comfort and welfare—this is the man who, if blessed with the ability and knowledge of a breeder and raiser, no matter if he has only the room and time to raise a few birds, stays in the ranks year after year, and who has helped to bring our thoroughbreds so near perfection as they are.

NEED FOR SKIMMING STATIONS.

They Can Be Managed So as to Prove a Great Gain.

Different creameries make different kinds of butter. This is true to a greater extent than is generally supposed. We do not now refer to the different kinds which are graded as fancy separator, western extra, etc. We refer to the fact that the different makes of butter which sell as the same grade and for the same price are not alike. Go with us to the creameries clustered like hives of industry in the dairy regions. Examine the sales bills, and you will find them the same in many creameries. Examine the butter critically, and you will find a difference for all that. We can take you to creameries doing equally well when tested by sales, getting a half cent above highest quotations, the returns precisely the same, but the butter so different that any amateur can tell them one from the other.

Now, consumers are not alike in their preferences, and clean, sweet, fresh butter is in demand. One class of customers prefer butter not quite like that preferred by another class. The commission men become discriminating. They learn the distinctive features, they know the peculiarities of butter from each creamery, and they work up a trade among those who like just that kind. It takes time to do this, but that is what they are there for.

The application is this: Some butter makers make a grade that is preferred by a large number of discriminating buyers, while the number of consumers who prefer the butter from some other creamery is less. To a limited extent one butter sells as well as the other, but the market for one kind is wider than for others.

Remember we are speaking all the time of good butter. It therefore follows that the butter makers who have the knack of making the butter which commands the widest market can extend their manufacture at pleasure, while those with a smaller number of consumers preferring their kind cannot profitably do this. Here is where the skimming station comes in for a hearing. It will reduce hauling expenses, for their cheaper cost justifies placing them nearer each other. It will give employment to an army of "cheap" butter makers (cheap because the have not the knack of finishing off the product greatest in demand) and prevent the loss which has come through their employment in the creamery. It will enable the expert who churns the whole to make it just as it should be made to catch the best market.

But the cream from skimming stations has been somewhat under the ban, for after it is hauled over the roads it is somewhat "worn out," and the butter maker does not look kindly upon it. Sometimes it is all right, perhaps generally, but there is a chance for a miss, and this chance puts the fair name of the creamery in jeopardy. These chances are now getting better understood, and the road to success is getting straighter. Pasteurizing is dispersing many a cloud from the dairy skies. There becomes visible a new field to be occupied and made fruitful. These droughty times have made it unprofitably to run many a creamery because the supply of milk is too small to pay the expense, but if there were skim stations in the surrounding localities to re-enforce the supply by taking milk which is too far removed from the creamery to be hauled there, then many a creamery with wheels now idle would be coining wealth for its owners and for the community.—Creamery Journal.

Dairy and Creamery.

Freeborn county, Minn., has 20 townships, 24 creameries and 18,000 inhabitants. It also contains a large number of hogs and much other live stock. In Freeborn county money is not scarce, and times are not hard, even in the present depression. The reason is to be found in Freeborn county's 25 creameries, more than one to every township.

A creamery located in the right spot and managed just right is sure to bring prosperity to the neighborhood.

A butter maker says one of his cows produced two pounds a day. Her feed which he gave plentifully, made the butter cost him, all told, 9½ cents a pound. Consequently, if he sold the butter even at a low price, that cow paid. Beside her was another cow whose butter cost him 19 cents a pound. The first thing for a man who makes butter or sells cream to do is to find out which cows make butter for 9 cents a pound and which for 19. It makes all the difference in the world.

Cows for winter dairying must now come in fresh before the 1st of October or they will not fill the bill.

The Creamery Journal sent a circular to a large number of creamery men, asking them if they ran their factories on Sunday and what they thought of it. Forty-four creamery proprietors answered, and of these 34 closed their establishments absolutely on Sunday, and they did not think it necessary or wise to open them. Of the rest one ran Sunday only when he could not help it, and another for a short time on that day. One churned Saturday's cream, but took in no milk. Still another had tried both ways and thought he could make just as much money by closing his factory on Sunday as by keeping it open. Four kept their creameries running during the hot months on Sunday. Only two kept their machinery going on Sunday just the same as any other day and believed this to be the best plan.

Prizes to the amount of $1,000 were offered by the last executive board of the New York State Agricultural society. Their scale of points was the following: Butter—flavor, 45; grain, 25; color, 15; salting, 10; packing, 5. Cheese—flavor, 50; texture and body, 25; color, 15; finish, 10. All entries scoring less than 75 to be disqualified.

It takes nine pounds of milk to make one pound of pot cheese, and pot cheese with cream over it is a dish for the gods. This cheese is often called smearcase.

MYSTERIES!

The Nervous System the Seat of Life and Mind. Recent Wonderful Discoveries.

No mystery has ever compared with that of human life. It has been the leading subject of professional research and study in all ages. But notwithstanding this fact it is not generally known that the seat of life is located in the upper part of the spinal cord, near the base of the brain, and so sensitive is this portion of the nervous system that even the prick of a needle will cause instant death.

Recent discoveries have demonstrated that all the organs of the body are under the control of the nerve centers, located in or near the base of the brain, and that when these are deranged the organs which they supply with nerve fluid are also deranged. When it is remembered that a serious injury to the spinal cord will cause paralysis of the body below the injured point, because the nerve force is prevented by the injury from reaching the paralyzed portion, it will be understood how the derangement of the nerve centers will cause the derangement of the various organs which they supply with nerve force.

Two-thirds of chronic diseases are due to the imperfect action of the nerve centers at the base of the brain, not from a derangement primarily originating in the organ itself. The great mistake of physicians in treating these diseases is that they treat the organ rather than the nerve centers which are the cause of the trouble.

DR. FRANKLIN MILES, the celebrated specialist, has profoundly studied this subject for over 20 years, and has made many important discoveries in connection with it, chief among them being the facts contained in the above statement, and that the ordinary methods of treatment are wrong. All headache, dizziness, dullness, confusion, pressure, blues, mania, melancholy, insanity, epilepsy, St. Vitus dance, etc., are nervous diseases no matter how caused. The wonderful success of Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine is due to the fact that it is based on the foregoing principle.

DR. MILES' RESTORATIVE NERVINE is sold by all druggists on a positive guarantee, or sent direct by DR. MILES MEDICAL CO., Elkhart, Ind., on receipt of price, $1 per bottle, six bottles for $5, express prepaid. It contains neither opiates nor dangerous drugs.

NEWS OF OUR NEIGHBORS.

As Culled from our County Exchanges.

FOSSTON FANCIES.

(From the Thirteen Towns.)

H. C. Misner, of Euclid, was in town between trains yesterday. Mr. Misner is a prosperous merchant in that place, and this was his first visit to Fosston. He expressed himself as well pleased with our town.

R. H. Connor, of Tuscon, Arizona, who has been appointed to fill the vacancy left by John Dowd some time since, on the government timber estimating corps, arrived here last Saturday and left early this week for the scene of operations.

Attorney J. A. Hendricks, who for several years past has been practicing at his profession in Sacred Heart, Minn., is at present visiting with relatives in this vicinity, and, after taking a short vacation, intends to locate in Fosston and open a law office.

Andrew Opheim, the well known Fertile merchant, arrived here on Tuesday of this week, returning home yesterday. While here Mr. Opheim completed arrangements for the cutting, hauling and sawing of about 40,000 feet of lumber which is now standing on property owned by him on section 29, of the town of Columbia. Isaac Vestrem secured the contract for cutting the timber and F. H. Noel will do the sawing at his mill. Work begins at once in the woods and Mr. Noel will commence sawing in about two weeks.

Principal R. W. Hitchcock and staff opened the public school Monday morning with a largely increased attendance of scholars. The board has found it necessary to procure a number of new desks and an additional department will be required in order to accommodate those seeking knowledge at this school. The building which, when erected three years ago, was much larger than needed at that time, is now well filled and its full capacity is likely to be tested before the present term expires.

Thief River Falls Press: Wednesday morning the angel of death entered the household of Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Rohbecke and snatched away their little baby boy George Paul. The little one had been ailing since its birth, but the fond parents continually hoped that its weakness was only transitory. Hope, however, was only a myth to lure them on to greater affection until the fatal hour when life was yielded up. The funeral services were held at the house yesterday afternoon, Revs. Kennlston and Bechtel officiating, and the interment was made in Greenwood cemetery. Mr. and Mrs. Rohbecke have the sympathy of all in their sad bereavement.

All children are liable to attacks of croup, and while all mothers have a dread of this disease, how often does it happen that they are aroused from their sleep by the croupy cough of a child, and find themselves with nothing at hand to protect and maybe save the life of their little one. It is not expensive to have a bottle of Haller's Sure Cure Cough Syrup in the house. Give it freely. Hoarseness disappears. Phlegm in the throat is loosened and your worry ceases. Sold and and guaranteed by F. L. Kermott.

The Common Cold.

Medical writers have recently called attention to the fact that the common cold, which most people suppose they "catch" by undue exposure, though they cannot, for the life of them tell how or when, is frequently the result of a debilitated condition of the body, and that the head-ache, catarrhal trouble, sore throat and other accompaniments of a cold are signs of an impure condition of the blood. This explanation is at least reasonable, and it is desirable that it should be understood, as it points to the proper and only method by which this uncomfortable and in many instances, dangerous condition may be avoided or overcome. It is not uncommon to hear people remark that they suffer constantly with "a cold" from early fall until the warm weather returns in the spring. This is undoubtedly due to the fact that the system is weakened, that it lacks vitality, is poorly nourished and can not resist the severer trials that come with the coming of fall and winter weather.

Of course the remedy for these ailments, and the preventive, if they have not already made their encroachments, consists in a course of treatment which will build up and strengthen the physical system. In the first place the blood must be purified and invigorated so that it can carry health and vitality to all the organs of the body, enabling the heart and lungs, the liver, bowels and skin to perform their proper functions. The digestive organs must then be stimulated and strengthened and made to do their part in supplying the wasted and much needed strength to the system.

For the work of purifying the blood and giving strength and vitality to the system, nothing has yet been found equal to Hood's Sarsaparilla. The burden of the testimonials from people who have taken Hood's Sarsaparilla is that it purifies their blood, removes pimples, boils and all similar eruptions, gives them an appetite and makes them feel strong. This is just what is needed to fortify the system against that condition for which people in general have no better name than a "cold." A few bottles of Hood's Sarsaparilla taken at this season would be sufficient to give that tone and stimulus to the organs of the body which are indispensable to health, especially in trying weather, and certainly, a few dollars expended now in taking measures to prevent sickness or even the discomforts of a long continued "cold" would be better than a fit of sickness and heavy doctor's bills later on. In buying medicine, as in buying anything else, it is well to see that you get an honest article, and such Hood's Sarsaparilla is everywhere recognized to be.

The Old and the New.

Truly these are trying times for the ladies of the old school. There was one of them, a pretty, silver haired little woman, at the linen counter of a Twenty-third street store the other day. A tall, breezy, athletic looking young person of her acquaintance greeted her.

"I suppose that you," said the old lady, with a smile full of meaning, "are out looking for things to fit up that little nest which is soon to be made?"

"Oh, dear, no!" replied the young woman. "I'm here for equestrian tights. I wear them every winter. So much more comfortable than petticoats!"

The old lady gasped, but tried to control her feelings. The young woman went on:

"By the way, you must come around to the nest, as you call it, some time after the last of next week. We'll be there."

"What!" exclaimed the old lady. "Are you to be married next week, and the invitations not yet out?"

"Yes, we're to be married, but there isn't going to be a show wedding. What's the good?"

"What day?" faltered the silver haired dame.

"I don't know yet. But some day next week, surely—which ever one I have the least to do on," answered the young woman. "Goodby. I must get those equestrians. And be sure to come to see us!"—New York World.

Omaha's Bright Women.

Omaha is a progressive city, so far as the number of its advanced women is concerned. It has ten times as many women teachers as men, a number of women physicians, a woman lawyer, two women druggists, a woman florist, three newspaper women, and a whole army of typewriters and stenographers, to say nothing of trained nurses and women in the arts.

The one woman lawyer is Miss Mae Wood, an alert, comely and positive young woman, who studied with a well established lawyer, and who is practicing in his office at present. Miss Wood has entered her profession very seriously and at present intends to make it her life work. The pioneer among women doctors is Dr. Amelia Burroughs, who has been at work in Omaha for 13 years.

Omaha also claims to have the only woman in America entitled to use the letters D. D. after her name. She is Dr. Augusta Chapin, who presides at present over the First Universalist church of this city. The Rev. Mary Giard Andrews is also a Universalist clergyman and preaches twice a month in Iowa.—Omaha Letter.

Women Overseers of the Poor.

The Lowell (Mass.) Mail advises the appointment of women as overseers of the poor in that city. It says:

Mrs. Wolcott, wife of the lieutenant governor, is a member of the board of Boston overseers. Brookline has had women as overseers since 1877, and Winchester since 1891, and this with the experience of Boston has shown that it is desirable to elect women to such positions. They have the time for the work, the classes to be aided are largely composed of women and children, and they have special fitness to advise with the matrons of almshouses about the domestic arrangements of these institutions. There are numbers of intelligent middle

Samuel Fielden, the pardoned Chicago anarchist, has turned farmer because he does not like city life. He was born in the north of England some 50 years ago and was by turns a farmer and preacher before he fell in with the anarchists. He was one of the group

Of the condemned Parsons, Fischer, Engel and Spies were hanged, Louis Ling killed himself, Neebe was condemned to 15 years' imprisonment, and Schwab and Fielden, who had been sentenced to death, had their sentences commuted to imprisonment for life. The last three, after nearly six years in Joliet, were pardoned by Governor Altgeld.

Head Horseshoer of the Army.

Mr. John Kiernan has been chief farrier and instructor in horseshoeing in the United States army for 25 years and has a very valuable collection of farriery exhibits, showing the progress of the science and effects of good and bad treatment especially in horseshoeing. He was born in County Langford, Ireland, 55 years ago, but came to this country at the age of 15, and early in life became so noted for horseshoeing that he was taken into the special service of Robert Bonner. In 1868 he entered the government service and one year later was made chief of his department.

The Republican Senatorial caucus held in St. Paul on Friday night to elect a Republican candidate for U. senator to succeed Washburn, iled to make the selection after asting hours of time and taking x ballots. The fight was between elson and Washburn, with Nelson ecidedly in the lead. The first ballot stood:

W. D. Washburn	61
Knute Nelson	45

Pillsbury	2
Tawney	1

Since the caucus the friends of all f the aspirants except Washburn ave been urging the call of another aucus, but for some reason W. D. and his friends did not seem to want another, and as they have control in the caucus committee none was held. The result of the caucus ndicates defeat for Washburn and he election of Nelson or a deadlock between those two, in which Comstock's chances are best.

THE COUNTY BOARD.

The county board, at its regular January meeting, after getting organized, approving bonds of officials and hiring the present jailor for the year, proceeded with business as follows:

After passing the usual grist of bills the board adjourned.

THE PROSPECTS.

The prospects for the coming year, while not as roseate as we might wish, perhaps, are still brighter than might be apprehended from the expression of the past year or so. For the farmer the prospects for a good market for his oats his barley his flax, his corn his potatoes his butter, his eggs his pork, in fact for everything he has to raise is very flattering indeed compared with past experiences. Again, for the new-comer the man who comes to this country to open out a farm and make his home here the conditions are far better than ever before from the fact that everything he has to have is cheaper than ever before and that he has an advantage the early settler did not have and he finds furthermore good schools, good churches already established—something that the early settler did not have. Land can be had also at less than half its actual value for use and if he avoids running into debt he can get along all right far better than did many of the early settlers who can now see just where they made their mistakes and wish they had figured differently. Certainly this is a good time for men to come here to make an independent and happy home and the probability is that these conditions will change in the early future so far as the price of land is concerned at least. The markets will grow better as time passes and soon the farmer of the Red River Valley will be in a more happy and prosperous condition than he has been for the past year or so.

I now have money again to loan on good improved farms.

DISTRICT COURT.

Proceedings of the District Court, as Seen by the Journal Court Reporter

WEDNESDAY AFTERNOON, JAN. 16.

The Thompson damage case occupied the attention of the court until Friday morning, 10 o'clock, when the jury retired to make up their verdict. They soon returned with a verdict for the plaintiff, assessing his damages at $2,044.25. A stay of proceedings was granted and more than likely the case will go to the supreme court.

The case of Joseph Mercil vs. M. Brouillette et al, was the next jury case set for this, Friday morning. It was continued.

A jury was then called in the case of J. S. Nichols vs. Brown Knutson. J. Walseth and R. J. Montagne attorneys for plaintiff and A. A. Miller for defendant. This is an action in replevin. Plaintiff sues to recover for a drill, the ownership of which was disputed by Larsen, Carpenter & Co. It appears that L., C. & Co. sold plaintiff a drill, taking a note and chattel mortgage for same. When the mortgage was due plaintiff was unable to make payment. Mr. Larsen demanded the drill or payment; plaintiff denied him either, and also refused to tell where the property was. Mr. Larsen directed the defendant, who was then with him, to take it, which was done. Nichols replevined the drill from Knutsen and has it yet. The case went to the jury about 3 o'clock.

The case of A. Chabot vs. Edward Hance and Louis Hance was settled.

In the case of State vs. Hanson for indecent assault, defendant entered a plea of "not guilty." No other cases being ready for trial to-day, court adjourned to 9 a. m Saturday.

SATURDAY MORNING, JAN. 19.

Court convened at 9 o'clock. The jury in the case of J. S. Nichols vs. Brown Knutson returned a verdict in favor of the plaintiff; that he is entitled to the return of the property, if a return can be had and $60 damages for the taking and detention of same, and in case a return cannot be had, the sum of $100 and interest thereon from June 11, 1894, $4.10.

Bartley Hagarty vs. Michael Funk is the title of the next case called. Plaintiff presented affidavits and asked for a continuance on account of necessary witnesses not being able to be present. The case was continued on payment of $10 costs.

The grand jury returned to the court seven indictments, just before noon. The parties have not been apprehended yet, and the nature of the indictments are not to be known until the parties are arrested.

SATURDAY AFTERNOON.

The case of State of Minnesota vs. Thomas Hanson, was called. Defendant is charged with indecent assault." L. E. Gossman prosecuting and A. R. Holston defending. The jury returned a verdict of "not guilty." The petit jurors were then discharged until the first Monday in March.

MONDAY, JAN. 21.

Court convened at 9 a. m. The parties against whom the grand jury returned indictments on Saturday were brought before the court. There were three indictments against Gustav Peterson and John N. Astley for selling intoxicating liquors to minors; and one against the same parties for selling to an habitual drunkard. Three indictments against Hans Romald for selling intoxicating liquors to minors. The parties live at Fertile. They were placed under bonds and will enter their plea later.

MONDAY AFTERNOON.

A motion to intervene, by the Security Trust Co., of Grand Forks, in a case from Marshall county was heard and motion granted.

H. Steenerson and J. Walseth filed motions in the Fertile whiskey cases to set aside the indictments; the question of the validity of the grand jury being the ground upon which the motion was based. The motion in each case was overruled. Defendants' counsel then filed a demurrer to each indictment; the principal objection being the failure to specify the time when the crime charged was committed, the indictment stating in words "on or about" such and such date. The argument on that point will be heard Tuesday at 10 a. m.

No cases were ready for trial today. One of the witnesses, Arthur Thompson, before the grand jury, seemed to have his share of trouble. After testifying before the grand jury, presumably upon the practices of gambling in East Grand Forks, he was arrested upon a charge of offering to take a bribe. Mr. Russel, a saloon keeper of that model city, swearing out the warrant in Justice Holt's office. He was taken before that justice waived examination and will appear before the grand jury Tuesday morning. There are different stories as to the facts in the case. Some say they attempted to buy him and others say that he offered to take $100 and leave the state and refuse to testify before the grand jury. Thompson is a barber at Grand Forks, N. D. Perhaps the grand jury will enlighten us as to the merits of the case.

TUESDAY MORNING, JAN. 22.

The county attorney moved to dismiss the seven indictments against the Fertile parties, to which the defendants' counsel demurred yesterday. The motion to dismiss was granted. Thus ended the first seven indictments of the grand jury. The same matter was brought before that body again by the county attorney, and the time specified as on a certain day.

In the two cases of the St. Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba Railway Co. against Eucharist Huot and Leon Huot, the plaintiff was allowed to take judgment. The defendant failed to appear. They were suits in ejectment. Thos. R. Benton and A. C. Wilkinson appearing for plaintiff and Wm. Watts for defendants.

The case of the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Ry Co. vs. Michel Brouliette was next called, T. R. Benton and A. C. Wilkinson for plaintiff and H. Steenerson for defendant. This is a suit in ejectment from plaintiff's land.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON.

Court convened at 2 o'clock, and resumed the Brouliette case. After finishing that the cases of the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway Co., vs. Ole Anderson and C. Carlson were called. It was stipulated by the parties in each case that the plaintiff have judgment for the possession of the land without cost or damage to either party, and without allowance for any improvements put upon the land by the defendant. These were cases in ejectment.

The same plaintiff vs. Eucharist Huot and against Leon Huot, the plaintiff was allowed to take judgment for the possession of the land without costs or damages. No appearance on the part of the defendant. Court then adjourned.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

[From our Regular Correspondent.]

WASHINGTON, JAN. 18, 1895.

Democratic Senators who started out to show the democrats of the House how easy it was to agree upon a financial bill made a very short trip. They did not agree upon a financial bill—nobody really expected them to—but they split the democratic factions a little wider apart than they were before. Indeed, it may really be said that they added a new faction to those already existing in the ranks of the party. The democratic party in the Senate now consists of the Cleveland men, or cuckoos who are few in number and small in influence; the Gormanites, or anti-Cleveland men, who have dominated the little that has been done by the majority of the Senate, and David B. Hill, who is alone in the Senate, but who is feared because of his influence in the party outside of Congress. With these factions each pulling a different way nothing can be done in the Senate that does not receive the support of the republicans. It is because of this fact that business continues to improve, notwithstanding democratic attempts to tinker with the finance, as they did with the tariff. The business men of the country know that the republican Senators can be depended upon to prevent any disastrous financial legislation, and hope that they can induce the majority to agree to some tariff amendments that will make the revenues of the government sufficient to meet the expenditures before the session closes,

The House is plodding along with the appropriation bills just as though it had never thought of tackling such a complicated and dangerous affair as a re-arrangement of the country's financial system. Secretary Carlisle made some changes in his currency bill and again submitted it to the House Banking and Currency committee, but it fell so flat that the committee made no attempt to get it before the House again.

Notwithstanding all the talk about the democratic administration running the government upon a more economical basis than it was run by the republicans, the Sundry Civil appropriation bill, which was this week reported to the House, carries $4,000,000 more than was appropriated for the current fiscal year.

It is clear to the veriest amateur in public affairs that the action of the Judiciary committee of the House, in reporting a resolution of impeachment against Judge Ricks, of Ohio, which was authorized by a vote of 7 to 6 in the committee, is nothing but buncombe. Even granting that the resolution will be adopted by the House, which is far from being a certainty, there would not be time for the Senate to conduct the trial, even if other things more important were left undone. There is another little obstacle that must be familiar to the gentlemen who are conducting this farce. That is the custom of giving the accused forty days notice in impeachment trials.

If the opinions expressed by individual Senators and Representatives are any indications of what Congress will do, and they are usually the very best, Great Britain will have to wait a long time before she gets a chance to lease that Hawiian island for a cable station. Mr. Cleveland is accused of having misrepresented the sentiment of the Hawaiian government concerning that request for the consent of the United States to such modification of the reciprocity treaty as will permit the island to be leased to Great Britain. According to more direct information, the government of Hawaii doesn't want that treaty modified at all, if the United States will only officially define its future intentions towards Hawaii; and the request was made not because a modification was wanted, but to give Congress a good opportunity to declare itself on the subject, and with the belief that it would be refused. Mr. Cleveland evidently thought differently, or he would not have committed himself in favor of granting the request,

In the opinion of everybody whose opinion is worth having Secretary Gresham would better have sent the correspondence relating to the surrender of the two Japanese students who sought the protection of the American consul in China, and their subsequent execution as spies by the Chinese, which was asked for by Senator Lodge's resolution, to the Senate without comment than to have attempted to write a defense founded upon assertions not borne out by the official correspondence, as he did. Senator Lodge says of Gresham's attempt to wriggle out of the responsibility: "Instead of those students being confessed spies our representatives in China insisted that they were not spies at all and that there was nothing to sustain the charge against them except the assertion of the Chinese. How Mr. Gresham could find warrant for his interpretation I cannot understand."

Diversified Farming.

OLIVER DALRYMPLE, THE GREATEST WHEAT RAISER IN AMERICA,

TELLS WHAT HE KNOWS ABOUT IT IN THE St. PAUL GLOBE.

Thirty years ago, when I commenced growing wheat, the price in New York was $1.50 $1.25 in Chicago, and $1 on the Mississippi river. We are now striking a range of prices 40 to 50 cents lower. The reduction has been brought about by the opening of old and new countries to the great markets of the world by means of railroads; by the introduction of improved machinery; by the returning of the world more and more, from year to year, to a gold basis; by throwing the product into the great centers; and by the construction of immense storage houses, which show great stocks at all times.

Our chief competitors in the British market are Russia and South America, while India and Australia compete in a subordinate degree. In all those countries the American producer comes into rivalry, as he places his surplus in the British market, with the 10, 20 30 and 40-cent laborer of the countries named. The day of high-priced wheat, as a permanent thing, has passed by. Nothing but an exceptional and world-wide loss of crops can give higher-priced wheat again for any length of time. When wheat struck 50 cents in Chicago in 1894 it probably struck bed-rock; because it reached the same price per pound, practically, as corn, oats and barley, and thus went into the great feed bin of the world, which absorbs ten bushels for live stock where one only is consumed when eaten by the human family. Whenever wheat declines to 40 cents in the country west of the Mississippi river, being superior to any other grain for animal food, it will go to market on foot, as corn has done for the last quarter of a century.

With reference to diversified farming, I will say that the best of farming in the best wheat countries will not justify the wheat grower in seeding more than two-thirds of his land in any one year in wheat. The other one-third should be rested in summer fallow or its equivalent. Thus, no part of the farm will be taxed with more than two wheat crops in succession. It is an open question among the best farmers how the one-third of land thus left out should be treated to rest and keep up its fertility and clean it from weeds. Some good farmers cultivate this third two summer fallowings and total rest. Some sow millet at the close of seeding-time and plow under the millet before it heads out. Some put in a crop of timothy, and cut and plow early in July. Some cultivate thoroughly in corn or potatoes. All are good systems, but I would give the preference to the millet treatment.

No doubt the ultimate destiny of all kinds of farming is the diversified plan. By that I mean the raising of of all kinds of live stock and the cultivation of all crops suitable to one's latitude; and the sooner this view of the question is understood and adopted by the farmers of the Northwest, the better the interest will be promoted individually and collectively,

The cheap and efficient creamery separator has increased the butter product and has promoted its manufacture with remarkable facility and success. If present prices can be maintained, this branch will become an important factor in diversified farming.

The original sources of wealth are the fields, the forests and the mines. The fields have taken and will retain the precedence. The facts that, in this great commercial and monetary crisis, the country is in better condition than the city; that the farm is a class of property which no financial cyclone can sweep away in a day, and that the cultivator of the soil, however humble or limited in his means, will remain his own master, will always have employment and can always say, so far as his family is concerned. "Here is work and bread for all"—so long as these things are true will the farm be known as "real" estate, as against the fictitious estate, and so long will it be appreciated by the American people and be the sheet anchor of our great population and business.

The history of this country has demonstrated that a period of hard times comes once in about twenty years, and lasts for four or five years. While farm lands and farm products sympathized with the great shrinkages in values, their shrinkages has been less than that in the value of bonds, stocks, merchandise, etc. In this struggle of "the survival of the fittest" the agriculturist of our country should content himself and congratulate himself upon the staying qualities of his business and his property.

OLIVER DALRYMPLE.

A. MONTANA HORROR

SEVENTY-FIVE PEOPLE KILLED IN AN EXPLOSION AT BUTTE.

Fire Department Wiped Out, Not a Single Man or Beast Escaping Death or Serious Injuries—Damage to Property Throughout the City Is Simply Enormous.

BUTTE, Mon., Jan. 16.—A fire occurred in the Butte Hardware company's warehouse, in which giant powder was stored. The fire department were at work on the fire when the explosion took place, killing scores of people. While efforts were being made to remove the dead and wounded a second explosion occurred. The entire fire department was wiped out, including the chief and all the horses. Three policemen were among the killed, who number at least 75. Plate glass was broken all over the city and the damage to property is enormous. All the ambulances were rushing to and from the scene of the explosion. The relatives of the killed are frantic and the city is in consternation. The powder in the warehouse was in violation of law. It was the greatest explosion in the history of the West.

Sights Something Awful.

The sights in the undertaking establishments are something awful. All are crowded with heaps of human flesh.

Here was half a head and a mutilated trunk below it; in another place an armless and legless trunk, with the face disfigured beyond all possibility of recognition.

Scarcely any of the corpses were recognizable, and the complete roll of dead will probably never be known.

There are 12 dead at the Butte undertaking rooms; 10 at the Montana, and 19 at the Sherman.

Forty-three wounded are in the hospitals and 28 of them are in a critical condition.

No attempt will be made to complete the identification of the dead until the injured are cared for.

The loss of life is variously estimated at from 50 to 75 and wounded will probably exceed 150.

DEATH ROLL GROWS.

The List of Missing at Butte a Large One. The Work of Relief.

BUTTE, Mon., Jan. 19.—Hour after hour the disaster has been putting on more distressing proportions. The list of known dead has swelled to 53 and at least four in the hospitals cannot recover. These are John Sloan, Charles Ashton, W. L. Miles and William Bow. Others are also believed to be fatally injured.

To the list of missing, the name of Charles Hoffbauer has been added. A few hours before the explosion he was up town and purchased a pair of shoes and on his way home he evidently stopped at the fire. One shoe, badly torn, of the new ones he had under his arm, has been found a quarter of a mile from the scene of the catastrophe, but not a fragment of Hoffbauer has been found.

There is no doubt that many were blown to atoms who will never be heard of. Among the debris was found a number of letters addressed to William Moffeet, 463 Fremont street, Boston. The letters were from Canada, and were signed Ambrose Allen. It is supposed he is among the victims.

Every hour also brings additional reports of the injured. Fully 100 have been heard from, many of them being in a serious condition. The flashes and concussion of the explosion was severely felt at Belgrade, on this side of the mountain range, and 85 miles from Butte. It is estimated by mining men, familiar with explosives, that there was at least 20 tons of powder in the house. The law limits the storage of powder within a mile of the city limits at 150 pounds. The penalty for its violation, however, is only a nominal fine.

Investigating Grain Rates.

REBUKED BY THE COURT.

Sensational Scene at the Opening of the Hayward Trial.

MINNEAPOLIS, Jan. 21.—The trial of Harry Hayward for the murder of Miss Catherine Ging is occupying the criminal court here. It is not likely that the taking of evidence will begin for a week or more, as a long time will undoubtedly be taken to secure a jury. The prominence of Hayward, the defendant, and also of Miss Ging, and the cold bloodedness of the murder, make the trial one of the most interesting in the criminal history of the Northwest.

The trial is proceeding in Labor Temple, with Seagrave Smith as presiding judge.

A Sensational Scene

closed the morning proceedings. W. W. Erwin, attorney in chief for the defense, had just stated that he would summon a witness in the afternoon to prove that Juror Andrew Carlson had made prejudiced statements to a man at his house, and court was about to adjourn, when Judge Smith was apparently startled by the assertion of Mr. Erwin.

"I want to say right here," said Judge Smith, "that if any of the attorneys in this case have gone about looking up the jurors on this panel for the purpose of ascertaining their opinions in this case, it is contempt of court, and that they will be called to account for it as sure as I sit upon this bench."

"Allow me to say, if the court please," said John Day Smith, "that the defense has been to the trouble of examining, as it had the right to, the records of all the jurors upon this panel, as to their habits, morals and manner of life, in order—"

"You, sir, as an attorney at law, know what I mean, and what you have a right to do," cried the court. "I repeat that you have no right to inquire of jurors drawn on a panel in order to find out how they stand on a case. It is contempt of court, and you know it."

"If the court will allow me," said Mr. Smith, very mildly, "I wish to say that we have a right to ivestigate the character of jurors. Far be it from me to deny it is wrong to ascertain their opinions, and I would be the very last man at this bar to do such a thing."

"Well, I want it understood that this court will make it a point to inquire into the nature of all the questions asked these jurors," said the court. "You may have the right to examine into the character of jurors, but you have no right to visit them personally or have them visited." The court then adjourned.

The circumstance has created great excitement, and as the defense has admitted looking up every juror, already there are dark hints among spectators at the trial, of underhand work.

NO WRIT OF ERROR.

The Supreme Court Refuses the Petition of Debs and Associates.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 19.—The supreme court of the United States denied the petition of Eugene V. Debs, et al., participants in the big strike, for a writ of error. Chief Justice Fuller delivered the opinion, and said it was the unanimous opinion of the court that the writ would not lie. With reference to the application for habeas corpus, leave was granted to file a petition, and a rule entered making it returnable on the 28th inst. There was no written opinion and the proceedings were confined to the briefest possible statement.

MORE WAR IN HAWAII

ANOTHER ATTEMPT TO OVERTHROW THE GOVERNMENT.

A Number of the Natives Engaged in the Revolt Killed—Government Still in Control—Charles L. Carter, One of the Annexation Commissioners Among the Slain.

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 19.—The steamer Alameda arrived from Auckland and Sydney, via Honolulu, during the afternoon and brings news of a revolution and bloodshed at Honolulu.

Charles H. Carter, who was one of the annexation commissioners, was killed, and other government supporters were wounded. There has been much fighting and at least 12 natives have been killed. Nearly 200 revolutionists are under arrest. Robert Wilcox is the leader of the rebels. The fighting was still in progress when the Alameda left Honolulu on Jan. 11, but the government forces had practically overcome the revolutionists.

PHILADELPHIA GOES.

Warship Ordered to Honolulu at the Request of Secretary Gresham.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 21. — Secretary Gresham has received official confirmation of the attempted rebellion in Hawaii. He has been in consultation for half an hour with Secretary Herbert relative to the immediate dispatch of a naval ship to the islands. Mr. Gresham at 10:30 a. m., was at the White House consulting with the president on the same matter. Secretary Herbert has also gone to the White House to take part in the consultation. The impression at the department is that the flagship Philadelphia with Admiral Beardslee would be dispatched to Honolulu.

Philadelphia in Sailing Order.

Mr. Herbert stated that the Philadelphia was at Mare Island, Cal., and could start almost immediately, delaying only long enough after receiving her sailing orders to take a few fresh stores and a little extra coal aboard. She carries a complement of nearly 400 officers and men, commanded by Capt. Colter, and could make the run of 2,080 miles to Honolulu in about six days. After consulting for some time, the two secretaries came to the conclusion that nothing should be done toward sending a ship to Hawaii, except by the direction of the president, so they went directly to the White House to learn the president's wishes in the matter. Before leaving the department, Secretary Herbert conferred with Admiral Ramsay, chief of the navigation bureau, and everything was put in train for the immediate dispatch of sailing orders to Admiral Beardslee should the president decide to send a ship to Hawaii.

NEW PRESIDENT OF FRANCE.

M. Felix Faure Chosen on the Second Ballot.

VERSAILLES, Jan. 19.—M. Felix Faure, minister of marine in the present cabinet, was elected on the second ballot to be president of the French republic. Faure polled 430 votes to 361 votes polled by his nearest opponent, Brisson, president of the chamber of deputies. The Socialists protested violently when the result of the ballot was made known. M. Faure accepted the honor in a brief speech, promising to devote all his energies to the accomplishment of his task.

At 8:30 p. m. a 4-horse landau, escorted by a guard of horse artillery, drove up to the entrance of the palace and the newly elected president entered the vehicle. Then, escorted by a detachment of dragoons and mounted gendarmes, he started for Paris.

The square in front of the palace was packed with people who had been waiting there since noon, and there were loud cheers of "Vive la Republique" as the carriage drove away.

President Faure is an able speaker, administrator and shipbuilder, aged 52 years. He is a native of Havre and has the Norman coolheadedness and acumen.

THE WORK OF CONGRESS

Tuesday, Jan. 15.

The day in the house was spent in debate on the Indian appropriation bill, while the senate continued its currency talk.

Wednesday, Jan. 16.

After a debate covering a week the senate voted down Mr. Hill's proposition to refer the legality of the income tax to the courts, only five senators joining with Mr. in supporting the proposition. Mr. Hill, however, secured the adoption of an important amendment limiting the interrogatories of the officers seeking to collect the tax. The amendment will have the effect of compelling the treasury department to change its regulations as to collecting the income tax. Mr. Lodge's efforts to have income tax officials placed under civil service rules was defeated. The income tax appropriation was then agreed to and the deficiency appropriation bill passed.

After the passage of several bills of local importance the morning hour expired and the house went into committee of the whole for the further consideration of the Indian appropriation bill. Mr. Walker of Massachusetts took advantage of the latitude allowed for debate to discuss the conditions of the treasury and the sources of revenue out of which the enormous expenditures of the government were to be defrayed. A long debate followed, in which Reed and Simpson took prominent part.

Thursday, Jan. 17.

The pension bill appropriating $141,000,000 was passed by the senate with two important amendments, one making $6 the lowest rate for pension disability and another repealing the present law cutting off the pensions of non-residents.

The army bill appropriating $23,250,000 was then taken up.

The day in the house was again devoted to the Indian appropriation bill and fair progress was made. A number of amendments were adopted, the most important being to pay to the Cherokee nation $1,660,000. An amendment by Mr. Pickler to discontinue the service of army officers as Indian agents was ruled out of order.

Friday, Jan. 18.

The senate passed the army appropriation bill, carrying $23,000,000, and the bill which in effect advances General Schofield, in command of the army, to the rank of lieutenant general held by Generals Sherman and Sheridan. Aside from this the day was given to the debate on the Nicaraguan canal bill.

The house considered the Indian appropriation bill and passed one or two minor measures.

Saturday, Jan. 19.

Both houses devoted the morning to discussing the Hawaiian attempted revolution and some fiery speeches were made. Boutelle of Maine was the principal speaker in the house and his denunciation of the administration's Hawaiian policy was something almost tragic. Mr. Lodge led the debate in the senate.

Monday, Jan. 21.

After the Hawaiian debate in the senate the rest of the day was devoted mainly to appropriation bills, the fortification bill, carrying $2,000,000 approximately, being passed, and the deficiency bill, including the income tax appropriation, being finally agreed to as it came from the conference of the two houses. Mr. Hill made another fruitless effort to amend the income tax proposition, but his proposition was voted down—26 to 19. It was determined to close the debate and take a vote on the long pending Nicaragua canal bill next Friday.

The house, under a special order, passed seven public building bills, among them one for Chicago, carrying $4,000,000. Mr. Richardson of Tennessee was elected speaker pro tem, to act during the absence of Mr. Crisp.

WILL HEAR RICKS.

Proceedings for Impeachment of the Ohio Judge Come to a Sudden Halt.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 19.—The judiciary committee of the house held a long session over the Ricks case. Representative Bailey of Texas presented the majority report, drawn by himself, and Representative Broderick the minority report. The friends of Judge Ricks endeavored to reverse the decision of the previous meeting, but after three hours there was no sign of a conclusion being reached.

Finally the committee decided by a vote of 7 to 5, to reopen the case by extending an invitation to Judge Ricks to appear before them if he so desired.

STATE LEGISLATURE

TWENTY-NINTH BIENNIAL SESSION

Tuesday, Jan. 15.

SENATE—The senate devoted its short session to business, without affording any opportunity to make attempted "play to the galleries." There was no enlivening incident except a presentation to Lieutenant Governor Clough of a mahogany gavel made by the pupils of the St. Paul manual training school.

Among the important bills introduced was a "corrupt practices act," by Senator Ozmun of Ramsey. The bill is designed to check the corrupt use of money in political campaigns.

Senator Yale of Winona sprung a sensation by offering a resolution "that the senate, the house concurring, that this legislature adjourn sine die on Friday, March 8."

HOUSE.—The house was busy with the introduction of bills for about an hour, and several of the measures are important. Among them were bills to license peddlers; for a graduated and progressive tax on gifts, inheritances, devises, bequests and legacies; to amend section 69, chapter 11, general statutes of 1885, relating to penalties for delinquent taxes; to provide for the establishment of a state fish hatchery; to regulate passenger train service on railroads; to prohibit the aiming of firearms at a human being and to punish for the same; to appropriate money for opening the closed water tributary to the Red River and its tributaries.

Wednesday, Jan. 16.

SENATE—The bill appropriating $20,000 to be expended in affording relief to the sufferers from the Hinckley fire was passed under a suspension of the rules.

A joint resolution committing Minnesota's congressional representatives to opposition to the pooling bill now pending in the United States senate was introduced and temporarily sent to the railroad committee.

Before the senate adjourned at the expiration of its morning session Lieutenant Governor Clough announced that if it pleased the members to hold an afternoon session he should be ready to announce the regular standing committees. The offer was not accepted, however, and an adjournment was had until 10 a. m.

HOUSE—Nineteen bills and a resolution were introduced in the house. The resolution was by Mr. Feig and provides for the appointment of an expert accountant to investigate into the reports and charges that certain officials who have been entrusted with the custody of public funds have received interest thereon from the institutions and others with whom the money was deposited.

The rules were suspended and senate file No. 11, appropriating $20,000 for the relief of fire sufferers was passed. It now goes to the governor for his signature.

Thursday, Jan. 17.

SENATE—The standing committees of the senate were announced by President Clough. The distribution of the chairmanship plums has been awaited with much anxiety by the members, and when it occurred a general sense of relief and gratification was apparent, for, while everyone did not receive all he desired, there was a general recognition that the distribution of favors was as fair as anything could be.

Fifteen bills of more or less importance were introduced and referred to the appropriate committees.

HOUSE—Speaker Van Sant announced his committees at the morning session. They are generally conceded to be fairly made up. A number of doorkeepers, pages and minor employes were also named.

Ten house files were introduced and referred to committees.

The house then adjourned for the day.

Mr. Hendricks introduced H. F. No. 44, which provides for the reduction of the legal rate of interest from 8 to 6 per cent, and the contract rate from 10 to 8 per cent.

Friday, Jan. 18.

HOUSE—The house held a brief session. The committee on legislative expenses reported and the policy of strict economy was strongly endorsed. If the members can only manage to carry out their good resolutions to the end, this legislature will be the least expensive that has met in Minnesota in many a day.

Representative Henry Feig called up his sensational resolution on the inquiry into the condition of the financial institutions of the state by a committee of five representatives, and carried the question through by a unanimous vote despite the introduction of a substitute resolution and various objections as to the expense which might be incurred by such an investigation. To clinch the passage of the resolution Mr. Feig moved to reconsider and to lay the reconsideration on the table, and this, too, was voted through by a large majority.

SENATE.—The senate session was brief and uneventful. Among the bills introduced was one by Senator Masterman amending the law providing for designation of state depositories. The amendment provides that the designation of state depositories shall be made by a board of audit, consisting of the governor of the state, state auditor, secretary of state and attorney general. When the state funds are thus deposited the state treasurer is relieved from liability on his bond so far as the depository of funds is concerned.

Saturday, Jan. 19.

The house held a brief session in the morning at which a few bills were introduced. The senate was not in session. The house adjourned over to Tuesday morning.

Monday, Jan. 20.

The senate was in session for an hour during the afternoon. A few bills of minor importance were introduced.

MINNESOTA SENATORSHIP.

Separate Ballots in House and Senate. Nelson Was Ahead.

ST. PAUL, Jan. 23.—Both houses of the legislature balloted at noon for United States senator. The Populists nominated Ignatius Donnelly, and the Democrats, Senator McHale. Pillsbury dropped out of the race in the house, but still retained one vote in the senate. Following is the vote in detail:

House—Nelson, 45; Washburn, 32; Comstock, 10; McHale, 9; Donnelly, 8; McCleary, 7; Buckman, 1; Tawney, 1. Total, 118. Moore was absent.

Senate—Washburn, 22; Nelson, 17; Comstock, 3; McCleary, 1; Pillsbury, 1; Donnelly, 5; McHale, 2; Dickinson, 1; Mitchell, 1. Total, 53. Jones was absent.

An Indian Story.

Especially if it be a good one and full of useful information is always interesting.

I have a book beautifully illustrated, that tells much about the Indians and the northwest, and the miraculous escape of one man from them in the early days.

It tells also of the Yellowstone Park, the greatest wonder of the natural world.

My Wife is Nervous

Says many a man and too often he is inclined to blame the poor, tired woman who cannot eat or sleep, whose whole life is filled with misery because her blood has become impoverished and her nervous system exhausted. She needs a building up medicine like Hood's Sarsaparilla. A few bottles will enrich and vitalize her blood, tone and strengthen her digestive organs, give her a good appetite, enable her to sleep soundly, banish her nervousness and bring back her smiles. Mr. J. W. Roberson, of Greenfield, Tenn., says: "My wife began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla about three months ago and she is now taking her third bottle. She has been in poor health for fifteen years. Hood's Sarsaparilla is doing her more good than any other medicine she has ever taken. Her appetite is better, she looks better and there has been improvement in every way."

THE PROCLAMATION.

WORKING UP SENTIMENTS APPROPRIATE TO THANKSGIVING.

A Rough Draft Goes the Rounds and Picks Up Additions In Inks of All Colors—Finally Engrossed on Cream Colored, Gilt Edged Paper and Signed.

The concoction of that time honored document, the Thanksgiving proclamation, which sails forth annually as the impromptu expression of the national executive's religious gratitude, is the terror of the state department. Every year it is called upon to produce something new in that line, and its efforts to say the same thing in a different way, to avoid if possible verbatim copying of last year's letter, is one of the venerable jokes of the diplomatic greenroom.

About the first or second week of November, everybody knowing that the day falls on the last Thursday of that month, the chief clerk or some assistant secretary suggests that it is time to think about the "proclamation."

The chief clerk accordingly runs down the list of drafting clerks, ascertains which of Uncle Sam's servants is at the time basking in innocuous desuetude and dispatches to the delinquent by messenger an order to get up a draft for the proclamation.

This rouses the clerk from his lethargy. He rises to the situation with alacrity. His first inspiration is to turn out a paper different from its predecessors. The second arrests the divine afflatus. What on earth can he say that has not been said?

He writes the word "whereas" and pauses. In despair, at length, he turns for help to the classics—that is, he consults what Van Buren, Tyler and Fillmore have said in past years and makes that a groundwork for a draft. This embryo proclamation is then sent, through the chief clerk, to the assistant secretaries.

The first touch up the document receives is the insertion of a lot of capital H's for deification, which the clerk has forgotten in the throes of composition. Then an assistant secretary, finding it remiss in pious fervor, proceeds to insert piety with red ink marginal notes.

Thus the word prayer is followed by "songs of praise," and "tribute of gratitude" is bracketed after worship. So long, so faithfully has this servant of the people discharged this self appointed task that he is known in office parlance as the "divine invocator."

Thus revised the draft proceeds to some other grand mogul of the diplomatic greenroom, who finds that now that the Deity has been duly attended to something complimentary is due the nation at large. So carets, in blue pencil, insert "our prosperity and greatness," the "labors of our people" or "our marts of trade and traffic."

This tricolor draft is now handed around again and encounters an official in a new vein. His lunch did not agree with him. He is in a penitent mood. Seizing a pencil, he adds "that we have not been visited with swift punishment for our shortcomings."

Another handles the document and finds that it is too general, fails to identify the year, so he brings in a few master strokes in purple indelible pothooks alluding to the "deadly march of pestilence," "afflictive dispensation" and "fury of the elements."

The document now seems to meet the requirements. It is sent to an engrossing clerk, who proceeds to "fecit secundum artem," like a drug clerk making up a prescription. There are rules to be observed, rules as inviolable as those governing the Bank of England. A certain cream colored gilt edged paper is used. An elaborately ornamental title is flourished half way down the page in old German capital script announcing "A Proclamation by the President of the United States." The original whereas has met with many vicissitudes during the travels of the draft.

Restored to its proper dignity, the chief difficulty now is to disentangle the many colored insertions which crawl like caterpillars all over the sheet. By standing on his head, squinting on the bias or thumping his guessing bump to its utmost the engrossing clerk at last turns out a highly respectable and decorous looking document.

He submits it to the chief clerk. Meanwhile he waits in nervous suspense lest it be returned with a request for another copy or be disfigured by the insertion of more colored caterpillars.

If the engrossed copy is approved, it is taken to the White House. The executive may or may not read it. It's pretty safe to say he does not, but he never fails to sign it. With the president's signature it returns to the state department.

A lithograph copy is struck off and sent abroad to our ministers and consuls.

The original is filed in the "Book of Credence," a somber, venerable volume exhaling an old time aroma from its yellow time stained pages, which preserves from the foundation of our glorious republic the proclamations of all our executives in exquisite script, for the typewriter, that cruel electrocutor of the epistolary art, has yet to desecrate the precious files of the state archives.

Before seeking its mausoleum, however, a typewritten copy of the Thanksgiving proclamation is given out to the press, and the millions of readers think what a very pious, God fearing man is the president.—New York World.

Economical.

The Boston Transcript has heard of an economical man. He is a locksmith, and needing a sign he went to a sign painter and got an estimate for lettering. Then he nailed two locks to a board and asked the painter to paint after them the word "mith." The Philadelphia Ledger suggests, however, that it would have been cheaper to have used only one lock and paid the painter for an "s."

FOR HIS BRAVERY.

How Edward, Prince of Wales, Won the Title of Black Prince.

In the summer of the year 1346 Edward III crossed the English channel with 30,000 men to invade France. At Crecy, not far from the Seine, he was met on the 26th of August by King Philip with 130,000.

While the French were coming on in great disorder there was a total eclipse of the sun, accompanied by a terrible storm, after which the sun came out brightly, shining directly in the faces of the French, but on the backs of the English.

The first charge was made by 15,000 Genoese bowmen, who came forward with a shout, as though to scare the English. The latter, who had been ordered to lie flat on the earth, now arose, stepped forward a pace and let go their arrows so fast that they seemed like blinding snow.

The Genoese fled, and the French king ordered them to be cut down, so that they would not hinder the rest of the army.

In the meantime Edward, the prince of Wales, who was in command of one division, was surrounded by French knights, who, recognizing his rank, determined to capture or kill him. A message was sent to the king telling him that the prince was hard pressed.

"Is my son dead or hurt or on the earth felled?" he asked.

"No, sire," was the reply.

"Well, then," said the king, "return to them that sent you and tell them to send no more to me as long as my son is alive. I command them to suffer the child to win his spurs, for this day should be his."

The young prince was indeed in great danger. At one time he was unhorsed and struck to the ground, but one of his Welsh knights, who carried the great dragon standard, threw it over him as he lay and stood upon it till the enemy was forced back.

Soon the tide of battle had turned for the English. Edward came down from a high hill overlooking the field and took his son in his arms and kissed him.

"You are my true son," he said. "Right royally have you acquitted yourself and shown yourself to be a sovereign."

Young Edward on this occasion wore a suit of black armor, which so contrasted with his crimson and gold surcoat and the [illegible] fair complexion of his round, boyish face that he was called from that time the Black Prince.—Boston Herald.

Business Competition.

Billboard competition runs pretty high nowadays in the metropolis. An owner of some down town property was awakened by the loud ringing of his doorbell recently in Harlem.

"What on earth is that?" he exclaimed. "Is the house on fire?"

"Somebody's dead," said his wife. In the meantime a servant was returning from answering the bell.

"Please, sir, there's two gents down stairs as wishes to see you," said the girl.

"See me? Why, it's 3 o'clock in the morning."

"Important business, they says, sir."

"Well, I should think it would be, waking a man up this time o' night. I'll have to go down, I suppose."

He quickly threw on some clothing and went below. Two "gents" awaited him in the hall.

"I beg your pardon, sir, for knocking you up at this hour, but I want to make you a proposition for billboards around the corner of your place on Blank street while you are rebuilding. Name your figures, including two theater tickets every night of the season."

"And, sir," began the other "gent," "my company would like to make you a proposition for the use of the walls that may remain standing after the fire."

"Fire! Fire! What are you talking about?" The old man was completely nonplused.

"Why, your place caught fire about two hours ago," said the first "gent."

"And is gutted by this time," added the second "gent."

"Of course you'll give me the refusal for billboards. Remember the two theater tickets!" yelled the first "gent" as the old man bolted for the stairs.—Cor. Pittsburg Dispatch.

A High Calling.

Judge Sulzberger spoke a truth which is too often forgotten when he said, in a speech at the high school, that "there is not a teacher in the land that has a higher function than has the lowest teacher in the lowest class of the primary school. They have souls before them, and the faculties of those active, restless souls have all to be called forth." In these few fitting words are embraced the whole scope and possibilities of education, and they make the primary teacher's calling in point of dignity and responsibility the peer of any vocation that concerns mankind.—Philadelphia Record.

Color and Warmth.

The color of one's clothing has considerable to do with one's comfort in summer or winter. When exposed to the sunlight, white, it is said, receives 100 degrees F.; pale straw color, 102; dark yellow, 140; light green, 155; dark green, 168; turkey red, 165; blue, 198, and black, 208. Assuming that this table is correct, the person who dresses in light colors during the summer has about double the protection from the heat that the man or woman in black has.—Lancaster Homeopathic Envoy.

Borgne, the name of a Louisiana lake, is a French word meaning "blind of one eye." The name was applied to the lake because of a wonderful monster said to have been seen in its waters.

Were it not for the multitude of storks that throng to Egypt every winter there would be no living in the country, for after every inundation frogs appear in most incredible numbers.

RUSSIA'S ARISTOCRACY.

It Embraces a Million Noblemen and Princesses Who Are Shopgirls.

Russia possesses 650,000 nobles without counting 350,000 whose titles are not hereditary. Among the Russian nobility there are many of foreign origin. The Russian social code recognizes four categories or estates (soslovia)—that is to say, nobles, priests, town dwellers and peasants. The character of their employment distinguishes these classes from one another. Each is dependent on the czar for all its privileges, and the emperor has absolute power to change the condition of his subjects from a high to a low estate. None of these classes possesses either a historical, a political or a social individuality.

The Russian aristocracy is deprived of political importance, and it cannot boast of such chivalrous qualities as distinguished the French nobles. For the present it lacks sufficient good sense or education to play any part in public life. Russian aristocrats all desire to be considered as direct descendants of the Boyars, merely because it is pleasant to be such, and thus get a position of social superiority. Their ambition goes no higher. The Boyars, like the feudal western landowners, are the descendants of the men who of old composed the Russian prince's army. The members of the Russian aristocracy have in great part retained their places at court, so that there can be encountered most of the old historic names. Children of both sexes inherit the titles of their parents.

The Russian aristocracy is distinguished by overweening pride and haughtiness, and at the same time there is often united to this, in a bizarre contrast, a certain snobbishness. Access to the circles of high society is very difficult. It is only possible to penetrate into them if well born and well connected. The Russians rarely abandon their titles, being too proud of them to quit them easily. A marriage between a poor gentleman and a rich stranger, or vice versa, is considered in this country as a shameful mesalliance, and the couple would not be received in the aristocratic salons of the capital. Tolstoi, as well as Prince Mascbersky, director of the newspaper Grajdanine, has given in his novel very exact and graphic descriptions of Russian high life. But with all their innate pride the Russian great folk have never looked upon work as degrading. Thus, if need be, they will adopt with ease and without mauvaise honte any offices, any public charges. There is at St. Petersburg a prince who serves in the custom house, and many nobles and titled men become professors, schoolmasters, even actors. In a pastry cook shop at Moscow some princesses of high blood serve behind the counter. Others will become governesses, companions, housekeepers, telegraph clerks—in fact, will adopt any employment that may turn up.—Leisure Hour.

Goodhart's Joke.

"Yes, dear," said Mrs. Goodhart as she handed her husband his cup of coffee across the breakfast table, "I realize that we simply must economize, and I'm willing to do my part. I've thought of one way of economizing already."

"How is that?" asked Mr. Goodhert.

"Well, I'll tell you. I have a good sewing machine and plenty of time, and if you'll select the cloth I'll cut and make you that new pair of trousers you want my own self and save—why, Henry Goodhert, what is the matter with you? Mercy! The man is going into a fit. Here, Jane, bring some water! Go for the doctor, somebody! Help me to support him and keep him from falling out of his chair. What can the matter be? It looks like apoplexy. There! He breathes easier and has opened his eyes. Now, Henry, dear, what is it?"

"Nothing, my dear, nothing, only a sudden faintness. I'll get over it in a few minutes, and I—I—was just joking when I said that we had to begin economizing somewhere, only joking, my deer."—Detroit Free Press.

Boadicea's Undiscovered Tomb.

Bosdicea's tomb still remains undiscovered. Mr. Read of the British museum has had the trench dug several feet beyond the center of the tumulus on Parliament hill without having found anything to show for whom that particular burying mound was raised. So far the net result of the county council's quest has been a leaden musket ball and some chips of china, but both of these are modern jetsam. There are indications, though, that a portion of the ground was disturbed about a century ago.

For the rest the soil remains as it was in the beginning, heaped up, as there is no doubt was the case, for the purpose of interring some distinguished personage. It is not uncommon, it seems, even in undisturbed "barrows," to draw a blank, for the rain and the slow processes of nature completely destroy all vestiges of human remains that may have been buried in them.—London Telegraph.

A Cold Weather Veil.

A cold weather veil that is a good substitute for the flimsy illusion is one of the finest cobweb crape. This material comes in various light shades for veiling and is much more becoming than net or tulle. These veils may be washed, if the thrifty wearer desire, in a light suds, made of clear water and a little castile soap. Don't rub the delicate stuff, but squeeze gently and rinse in clear water, to which a drop or two of white mucilage have been added. Dry carefully pinned down on a pillow.

The battle of the Moat was a conflict before Medina between Mohammed and Abu Sofian. It was so called because most of the fighting was done in the moat that Mohammed had dug to protect the city from the besiegers.

SAFER THAN STEALING SIGNS.

Students May Have Them Painted to Order In a New York Shop.

In a side street east of Broadway is a sign which reads: "Novelties In Sign Painting. College Work a Specialty." Not having in a four years' course learned what need colleges have for any considerable supply of signs, the writer entered the shop to make inquiry. The proprietor was a small German, and he had two assistants. In reply to a few questions he told the following facts:

"I started in the business of sign painting about five years ago. Before I had been at it long I had numerous calls from college students who wanted special signs painted. They were in the habit of decorating their rooms with such plunder as beer signs, barbers' poles, advertising thermometers, etc., and some of them hit upon the idea of having special signs painted. Most of my business came from Columbia at first, but it soon spread to New Haven, Cambridge and Princeton, so that I now have two assistants.

"Of course cardboard are the cheapest signs, and the more ordinary kinds are made with stencil, such as 'Meals At All Hours' and 'Pay at the Desk.' Board signs, as 'Keep Off the Grass,' 'To Let,' are also stenciled and are consequently cheap. Hanging shop signs are dearer and have to be done by hand. I often have special orders, and some of the students have original ideas. For instance, there is a job for which I get $25. This is to be a 5 cent lunchroom sign which is supposed to have been broken off from the post on which it was fixed. It is to be supplied with legs and converted into a card table, and probably the owner will many times be obliged to recount the daring way in which he eluded the police with his plunder. There is a good demand for barber poles. Beer signs I buy to order and simply make my commission.

"Another queer fad is that of express labels, so that I have a small job printing establishment. Many men, especially glee club members, like to have their dress suit cases plastered with labels, especially of western and southern roads, to create the impression that they have been great travelers. You can hardly see the leather on some of these cases. Of course this is all very foolish, but it is very profitable to me. A fool and his money are soon parted."—New York Tribune.

AN ARTIST'S INSPIRATION.

Walter Burridge, the artist, tells a good story on himself and proves it by showing the blank space on the wall where the picture, one of the accessories of the tale, used to hang.

He went one day to the studio of a friend and found there an anatomical figure, such as are to be seen in studios everywhere. It was a good one, and Burridge wanted it, for his own had been broken. He expressed a desire to have it, but the artist friend wouldn't give it up for any money. It was his inspiration, he said. He needed it even for the composition of a letter. And, as for drawing anything in the human figure without it, that was simply hopeless. He couldn't spare it.

So Burridge went away. But another day, while in the same studio and in the absence of the owner, a third artist, who commonly shared the place and worked there, said Burridge could have the model if he wanted it. The owner had concluded to get along without it.

And about an hour after the owner came back. He sat down and tried to draw a wagon. But he couldn't. He tried to write a letter that had long been overdue. But he could not get his thoughts together.

"Something is gone," said he. "I can't do anything. I have lost something."

"Maybe it is your brains," said the man who shared his room. "Burridge has been over."

"The figure," cried the artist. "That is it." And he started out. When he came back, he brought not only the figure, but a water color sketch as well. It had taken Burridge days to complete the picture, and it marked one of the pleasantest events in his sojourn along the grand canyon of the Colorado.

But it squared him.—Chicago Herald.

Other People's Bread.

In dreary Kamchatka the pine or birch bark by itself, well macerated, pounded and baked, frequently constitutes the whole of the native bread food. Bread and butter to a young Kamchatkan is represented by dough of pine bark spread with seal fat, not a very appetizing combination to English notions. And not only the bark of the pine is thus utilized for food. The dwellers in certain parts of Siberia cut off the young and tender shoots and grind them down to form their flour. One imagines that the bread therefrom must have an unpleasantly resinous flavor.

In Iceland even the hardy pine is wanting, but the Icelander declares that "a bountiful Providence sends him bread out of the very stones." He scrapes a lichen—the Iceland moss—off the rocks and grinds it into fine flour, which serves him both for bread and puddings, and also as a thickening for his broth. Thus, truly, has stern experience taught him to live where most would starve.—Chambers' Journal.

Economical Fuel.

An economical fuel can be made as follows: Small coal, charcoal or sawdust, 1 part; clay or loam, 1 part; sand or ashes, 2 parts, with enough water to make the mass into stiff balls. These should be placed upon an ordinary fire to a height which is slightly above the bars. They produce a heat considerably more intense than that emitted by ordinary fuel and effect a saving of one-half the ordinary quantity of coals, while a fire thus made up will require neither stirring nor fresh fuel for eight or ten hours.—New York Dispatch.

THE hopes of Sam Phillips of being the discoverer of the next U. S. Senator in the person of Joel P. Heatwole seem destined to be eternally blasted. Sam don't seem to be in it this round.

AND now you hear about boodle. It is said that in the caucus Washburn was offered 14 votes for $10,000, and that he "threw up his hands in holy horror and declined." How vividly don't remind this us of the caucus six years ago!

SINCE the caucus it is openly talked that W. D. Washburn will throw all of his strength to Comstock—all that he can command. Those on the inside have predicted this all along. The question is, how many can he "throw?"

IT is refreshing to see what a radical change of base has taken place in the attitude of the Minneapolis papers on Gov. Nelson. A week or so ago they were filled with the most bitter vituperation because he dared to presume to enter the race against Washburn, but now they are as mild as a kitten. Very evidently they have heard something drop and are beginning to catch on to the drift of public sentiment.

Bob Ingersoll's recent visit to the twin cities furnishes the clergy of those cities with a subject to talk about. The following is an extract from the sermon of Archbishop John Ireland, one of the best biblical scholars of the age—one of the deepest thinkers. He said:—

The Bible! My soul goes out to it in love, gratitude, reverence worship. It is, indeed, the Bible—the book of books. The voice of the great master of the universe speaks to me through its pages; its light illumining the religious and moral world, radiates from his own divine face; the sweetness which it distils is the tenderness of his fatherhood. Written in it are my hopes for time and eternity. It is God's message to me, telling of my maker and my relations to him, marking my road to bliss, sustaining me on earth in trial and suffering, until the goal beyond heaven's portals is reached. They who insult the Bible insult what is best in me and dearest to me; they insult my inspirations and my hopes; they insult my God, and I were a traitor to myself and to him were I not ready to defend it, even to the sacrifice of my life.

Scoff then, you who dare, at Jesus and his Bible; scoff at all that is his, at Christendom and Christian civilization; scoff at family regeneration, at womanhood redeemed; scoff at sacramental marriage and holy virginity; scoff at the charity that has peopled the nations with asylums and hospitals; scoff at the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man; scoff at the enfranchised slave: at the most sacred principles of your own American constitution; scoff at Jesus and his Bible.

Away with this unchristian world. Away with its emptiness, its gloom its despair. Give me, I pray, my immortal soul, and my eternal God; give me my Bible and my Jesus; give my holy church in which Jesus lives, teaching me his divine graces; give me my Christian faith and my Christian hope; give me my Christian heaven beyond the grave. Yes, give me Jesus, his church and his Bible!

Northfield News:— The true editor who loves his profession has nothing but hearty encouragement for his fellow workers on the press. He can have but one wish, that he may prove worthy in some measure of their good opinion, and to be able to co-operate effectively in the work in which all journalists are enlisted, speaking the truth as he apprehends it without malice as without fear, advocating to the best of his ability whatsoever things are honest and of good report, and always bearing in mind the fact so often overlooked, that the ablest of editors are only human, that this world is a large, an intelligent, and a busy one, and that even if the newspaper reading part of the community took the remotest interest in controversies begun in wantonness and waged with acerbity the self-respect of journalists should always preserve them from confirming the world in the belief it is only too apt to entertain—and that not always without warrant—that their profession is that of the plug-ugly mercenary, or the vain-glorious boaster.

A Commercial Club.

A meeting of the business men of the city was held at office of John R. McKinnon on Saturday evening to consider the project of organizing a commercial club. A large number were in attendance and a lively interest was manifested. It was decided to organize but before proceeding further a committee was appointed to confer with the directors of the Columbia club to see what if anything could be done to re-organize that institution to embrace the scope contemplated in the proposed commercial club. The opinion was general that something should and could be done to organize and sustain a commercial club which could not fail to be of great benefit to our city.

THE GOLD PRODUCT.

(Minneapolis Evening Journal.)

The gold production of the world for 1894 will probably be shown by the next report of the director of the mint to have been about $182,000,000, an increase of nearly $26,000,000 over the year before. As usual, the United States leads with a production of nearly $45,000,000, a most excellent gain over the year before, when the total was $9,000,000 less. Following this country comes the Witwaterstrandt region of South Africa, which has gained some $12,000,000 from the record of 1893, and will show a total of $36,500,000. Australia is less than half a million ahead of the South African region, and will probably be passed by another season. Russia is the only producer of the precious metal that ranks near any of these large miners. While the increase of the Witwaterstrandt region for the year has been about a million a month, it is not likely that it will reach the output of the United States for a good many years, and the gold output of the Northwest and California is likely to lead the world for a long time. The increase in this country for the past year has been enormous and no less unexpected; every report of the director of the mint has raised the preceding estimates. At no time has there been such a search for the metal as at the beginning of 1895, and the indications are that the output for the United States for the present year will exceed $50,000,000, or equal a third of the world's production in 1893.

Fergus Falls Journal: There is no editor in the state who is entitled to more sympathy than Charlie Mitchell, of the Alexandria Post News. At heart and by nature a Washburn man, he has already by force of circumstances been compelled to turn a double somersault and is expecting daily to make another revolution. On Jan. 3 he was for Comstock, on the 10th for Nelson and on the 17th he will be for a dark horse. He is a good fellow, runs a bright newspaper but environment is too much for him.

Good Thing, Push It Again.

From the Litchfield Review.

Many people who laughed at the reciprocity clause of the McKinley bill have come to the conclusion that it was a pretty good thing after all. It was repealed by the Wilson bill, and now several countries have refused to admit American meats, etc. A little reciprocity now would be a good thing. The blundering Democratic administration has gotten the United States into trouble with several countries that were, under the reciprocity clause of the McKinley bill, on peaceful trade relations with our country. The present administration is unpopular—and justly, too—at home and abroad.

One of the Weary Walkers.

(From the Detroit Record.)

V. H. Sutton, the alleged champion long distance walker was in town Monday. Mr. Sutton represents that he left Chicago Dec. 4, to walk to Tacoma, for a wager of $250. He was to start without money, securing his living as best he could while on the trip, which was to be made within 62 days. He gave an exhibition of his ability to make fast time at the opera house on Monday evening, and stepped off at a rattling gate. While the fellow is undoubtedly a very fast walker, he is unquestionably a fraud. Night Marshal Rahm says he saw him get off No. 1 Sunday night and he took the passing train from here to Fargo Monday night. If this is a fair sample of his ability to get over the ground, he will no doubt reach Tacoma on time.

Keller's Buncombe Bills.

(From The St. Cloud Times.)

Senator Kellar has introduced bills cutting down the salaries of state officers one-half and reducing the compensation of members of the legislature to $300. These measures of the senator from Stearns are pure and unadulterated pieces of buncombe. The governor receives $5,000 per year. No citizen of common business sense believes this to be excessive, and it is pretty small business for any legislator to propose to cut it down. The same may be said as to the compensation of other state officials. Five dollars per day to members of the legislature is little enough. Their hotel bills cost them $2.00 per day, and the balance barely covers other legitimate expenses such as members are subjected to from many sources. Senator Kellar knows this as well as any man in either body. Why, then, propose a reduction? For buncombe pure and simple. The people of Minnesota do not ask that this niggardly policy be adopted. Away with these buncombe bills. They are nauseating. He don't want them.

Where is Charles?

(Norman County Herald.)

Last Thursday Marshal McDonald received a letter at the postoffice addressed to City Marshal, Ada, Minnesota, United States, America. It read as follows:—

11 Carden Lane, South Shields, Eng. Dec. 25th 1894. Dear Sir: Could you let me know if there is a young man in America the name of Charles Stewart, of South Shields, as I have not heard any word from him for months as he has been in America over fourteen months. I am his wife and have not had any money from him since he went away. It is reported in South Shields that he has been found dead in America Please, Sir, would you let me know as soon as possible.

Yours faithfully,

E. STAWART.

America covers considerable more ground than the English lady seems to think but she hit what was the right spot a couple of months ago. The Charles Stewart inquired for is no doubt the watchmaker who stayed with F. O. Weygant during last summer and who disappeared so suddenly before the arrival of a certain sum of money which he was momentarily expecting from old England. The marshal at once looked over his list of American citizens—seventy millions of them—alphabetically arranged in his Pocket Police Guide but failed to find the missing "Henglishman." To make quite sure he climbed up to the top of the flag staff on the hose tower and looked the country over and though he had some difficulty in scanning closely some inaccessible places over in Maine, down in Nevada and on the west coast, he is reasonably certain that the fellow has climbed over the back fence of Uncle Sam's wheat patch and is now in Winnipeg.

Who was our First President?

Judge Dallas, of the United States circuit court at Philadelphia, refused naturalization papers to an applicant for citizenship the other day because when asked who the first president of the United States was he said he did not know. If he had answered that George Washington was the first president Judge Dallas would probably have accepted him, but the answer would have been erroneous.

Histories of the United States lay but little emphasis upon the fact that John Randolph—the "John Randolph of Roanoke," whose career is familiar to every schoolboy—was de facto and de jure president of the United States during the time that intervened between the adoption of the constitution and the inauguration of Washington. The constitution was adopted on the same date as the election of Washington to the presidency. The government under the constitution, therefore, began its existence at that time, and as the constitution provided that in the event of a vacancy in the office of president and vice president, the duties of the president should devolve upon the president of the senate, Randolph, who occupied the latter office, became the legal president of the United States. Washington was elected president during the early part of January, 1779, and the date fixed for his inauguration, and also the date upon which the constitution was to go into effect, was the 4th of March of that year. He failed to arrive in New York, then the capitol of the Republic, until the 30th of April. For twenty-six days, therefore, there was a vacancy in the office of president of the United States. In this predicament its duties devolved upon John Randolph, who actually discharged them, and no question of his right to do so has ever arisen. Thus it appears that, although Washington was the first man elected to the presidency of the United States, he was not the first person to exercise the functions of that office under the constitution.

The late William B. Ogden, the first mayor of Chicago, was among the first persons in the country to place upon record the fact that Randolph was the first president of the United States. An ordinance passed the common council of that city during the administration of that gentleman which provided that the streets running east and west in Chicago proper—now the south division of that city—should be named after the presidents of the United States in their successive order. Mayor Ogden issued his proclamation in accordance with this ordinance, naming the first street [illegible] dolph. W[illegible] reached he found that one of the presidents of that name had to be ignored, or the street names duplicated, which was not to be thought of. He overcame the difficulty, however, by naming one of the streets Adams, in honor of President John Adams, and the next street Quincy, after his son and successor in office, John Quincy Adams.

To Bishop Samuel Fallows, of the Reformed Episcopal church, belongs the credit of having first placed upon the pages of history the fact that John Randolph was the first de facto president of the United States. All previous chroniclers have ignored the fact, and there are exceedingly few Americans who, if asked the question, "Who was the first president of the United States?" would not answer promptly, and with confidence in their correctness, "George Washington." And yet they would be wrong. Probably if Judge Dallas' rule as to the qualifications for citizenship were applied to himself he would be found wanting.

A STEP

In The Right Direction.

The meeting of the business men on Saturday evening was a move in the right direction and if it shall lead to the organization of a commercial club it would prove a grand good thing for the city. THE JOURNAL has often pointed out the benefits to be derived from the establishment of manufacturing industries in our midst and all such things can be accomplished better is the business men are organized than can be done by acting separately. Steps should be taken looking to the establishment of a market-place, a grist-mill, a pork packing factory, a starch factory, and other industries of the kind that could be obtained by a little encouragment and would do more to build up the material interests of our city and surrounding country than anything else that we could do at this time. With a good live organization we should be in shape to act upon every proposition that comes up just as soon as the occasion presented itself and not be obliged to wait, and delay until, perhaps we lose our chance entirely. Let us organize a club by all means.

JUDAISM AND HYGIENE.

The Mosaic Law Has Given the Hebrew Race Vigor and Hardihood.

It is indeed not a little singular that Christianity, in taking from Judaism its highest spiritual conception, should so have slighted the wonderful body of hygienic science which the Mosaic law embodies. The explanation, however, probably is that Christianity undertook to deal with the matters supernatural, while Judaism, whether ancient or modern, is concerned only with mundane affairs. As Lucien Wolf admits, Judaism is really a sort of positivism. Its aim is the attainment of happiness in this world, whereas Christianity is chiefly concerned about happiness in the world to come. But precisely because Judaism agrees with Herbert Spencer, in relegating supernatural speculation to the realm of the unknowable, the intensity of its worldly philosophy is the greater.

The wisdom and energy of the Jews, in fact, have been centered for years upon the re-enforcement and protection of all their natural forces. And thus it is that they anticipated the riper results of sanitary science, while still the hanging gardens of Babylon were a world's wonder, and while, from the temple of Belus, Chaldean priests charted the heavens and calculated the occultations of the stars. This Mosaic law, so despised of the gentiles, has given to the Hebrew race that vigor and hardihood which have brought it safely again and again through persecutions that must have rooted out weaker people, and today, when the foremost savants of the nineteenth century are painfully searching out the genesis of disease and laboriously devising remedies, the immunity of the Jews in the midst of pestilence once more indicates the reason of their survival and emphasizes the triumph of their sanitary system.

No other race has been willing to accept such a discipline, and no other race, therefore, exhibits similar vitality and exemption from epidemic diseases. Modern teachers of hygiene insist always upon the observance of system in these matters, and they have reason, for the Hebrew race is a pregnant example of the power of hygienic and dietary laws, applied with unremitting vigor from generation to generation.—Minneapolis Times.

Too Many Funerals.

A gentleman whose summer home is in Vermont brought back to Boston one fall a manservant from the country who had never before been in Boston. The sights and scenes in a big city impressed him peculiarly. One day he went to his employer and said:

"Mr. H——, I shall have to go back home."

"Why, Tom, have you not been treated kindly here?"

"Oh, yes, the treatment is all right, but then I'm afraid of my health."

"How is that?"

"Why, you see, Mr. H——, I saw four funerals going past your house today, and I guess Boston is a plaguy unhealthy sort of a town."—Boston Journal.

AYER'S Cherry Pectoral

SAVED HIS LIFE

So says Mr. T. M. Reed, a highly-respected Merchant of Middletown, Ill., of a Young Man who was supposed to be in Consumption.

"One of my customers, some years ago, had a son who had all the symptoms of consumption. The usual medicines afforded him no relief, and he steadily failed until he was unable to leave his bed. His mother applied to me for some remedy and I recommended Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. The young man took it according to directions, and soon began to improve until he became well and strong."—T. M. REED, Middletown, Ill.

"Some time ago, I caught a severe cold, my throat and lungs were badly inflamed, and I had a terrible cough. It was supposed that I was a victim of consumption, and my friends had little hope of recovery. But I bought a bottle of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, took it, and was entirely cured. No doubt, it saved my life."—I. JONES, Emerts Cove, Tenn.

T. B. McMahan, a Crookston old-timer was in from Stephen last week and from his tell that town must have a solid, wealthy foundation. He was buried at the expense of the county.

Sold and and guaranteed by F. L. Kermott.

The entertainment given at the M. E. church on Friday evening was something decidedly unique in its way—being a railroad trip from Keep-your-mouth-shut to Grin city, —in railway parlance, though, we believe the time-card read from Mumtown to Socialville. Charlie Misner was the genial conductor—better at Grintown than Mumville. He got mad and kicked every time the brakesman got out of Thune, and pulled the line on Engineer Tousley, to-backer. Sisson was good—looking, every inch the true railroad man who knows his biz. Conductor Misner utterly forgot all about the World's Fair, (for once) and wouldn't dead-head a mother's son of us—not even ye scribe.

[illegible] Post, after routine [illegible] performed on Friday evening [illegible] bit of a smoke social and discussed a box of Brown's choice cigars. The boys turned out as eagerly as they used to do to sign the pay-roll and seemed to enjoy it just as well. While this sort of thing will not be kept up all winter the boys will endeavor to keep up the social features to a degree that will render the post-room a pleasant place to meet and while away the long winter evenings. Everybody entitled to the benefits are cordially invited to drop in.

BANK BOOKKEEPING.

A Perfect System Never Has and May Never Be Developed.

The cashier of a prominent up town bank says that such a thing as a perfect system of bookkeeping has never been devised and probably never will be. "When you think of it," he said, "bookkeeping is simply a question of mental ingenuity. What one brain can devise in the way of safeguards another brain can usually undo, speaking in a general way. The daily papers in condemning the banks because of the meager salaries paid to bookkeepers overlook a very important fact. The banks pay the market rate to expert bookkeepers, which are anywhere from $1,860 to $2,200 a year. An almost unlimited number of men can be obtained at these figures, and paying more money would not make the banks a bit safer, for the simple reason that men of strong mental powers, great business capacity and unswerving integrity are not, as a rule, content to be mechanical bookkeepers in large institutions. I do not, of course, mean to disparage bookkeepers in any way.

"The point is that the man who make good bookkeepers are unimaginative, reliable and steady going persons, who are not influenced by great ambition, and who do not aspire to lofty places. It is not required of a bookkeeper that he shall have very high mental qualifications as bookkeeping is now conducted in our big institutions. Each man has a stipulated amount of work of a stereotyped nature to do. He has of course enough ingenuity to swindle, if he chooses to do so. Anybody who believes that a perfect system of bookkeeping can be devised must also believe that it would be impossible to counterfeit money. The Bank of England has been held up as a marvel for many years, and yet it is no secret that that institution was swindled in the most complete manner for many years before it was found out. The most important and conservative commercial agencies and financial institutions in this city and London have lost money through their employees, and the Credit Lyonnaise, in France, where bookkeeping is said to have been carried to the very highest point of safety, was completely upset by a number of clerks two years ago, who had no difficulty whatever in hoodwinking the experts and pocketing the bank's money."—New York Sun.

Who Invented the Guillotine?

It is now certain that neither Dr. J. I. Guillotin, who is said to have died upon the instrument which has a name so strikingly like his own, nor Dr. J. B. V. Guillotine, who has also been given the credit of being its inventor, was the designer of the French instrument of capital punishment. It is known to have been in use in Italy at least 500 years before the time of either of the gentleman mentioned and was the recognized instrument used for inflicting the death penalty in Scotland during both the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries. Conradin of Suabia was executed by such a machine at Naples in the year 1268, and that it was in use in France more than 100 years before the time of Dr. J. I. Guillotin is proved by the fact that the Duc de Montmorency was decapitated "by a sliding ax" in 1632.—St. Louis Republic.

The Principle In Thought.

During normal sleep cerebral force is restored which during the day was consumed. We cannot during wakefulness maintain an electric supply as fast as we disperse it, as not only all thought, but simple consciousness itself, must consume something. Those are marvelous microscopic twinkles of electric light that attend the disruption of the microscopic cells when we think. Wonderful is that carnal enginery whose going, wrought by cerebral action, marks the genesis, and whose stopping indicates the exodus of our lives.—New York Advertiser.

In the battle of Marengo 58,000 men participated, and of that number 13,000 were killed or wounded, about 22 per cent. Napoleon thought Marengo his greatest victory. He always kept throughout life the uniform he wore on that day.

DIGGING TUNNELS.

THE PRESSURE MEN BEAR WHILE WORKING UNDER WATER.

Peculiar Sensations and Sometimes Fatal Results—Tunneling Through a Water Hole Under the Hudson River—Interesting Talk With an Air Lock Worker.

Laboring on the firm earth, with "all out of doors" to breathe, perspiring and mayhap grumbling at one's hard luck, a person seldom, if ever, stops to think that men work day after day deep down in the water or the mud, with none but artificial light to guide their movements and only the air that is pumped to breathe.

People who work in the open air would have only to work for a short time in a diver's suit, a caisson or an air lock, getting a taste of what it is like and how it feels, to be cured forever of grumbling at their lot and to thank their lucky stars that it has been ordained that they work on top of the earth. The work of a diver, his sensations while under water and his experiences have often been written about, but those of the air lock and caisson worker have not. While he does not face the danger of fouling pipes and lines, as does the diver, he stays down longer, gets warmer, and his great danger lies in the stagnation of blood and paralysis, resulting from the change of atmosphere.

Mr. R. C. Rapier of East Cambridge is an air lock worker and talks most interestingly. His work was mainly in the air locks used in building the great Hudson river tunnel. To a reporter he talked of some of the sensations, dangers and experiences. He said that, while a man working on the surface of the earth bears up an atmospheric pressure of 15 pounds to the inch, man in the locks bear a pressure of from 15 to 50 pounds of compressed air, according to the depth. The heaviest pressure ever worked under was borne by five divers on the Swedish coast—65 pounds. Four of these died five minutes after coming out.

While as a general thing the diver stands not nearly that amount of pressure and seldom stays down more than two hours, the men in the Hudson river tunnel stood a pressure of from 45 to 46½ pounds and worked in four hour shifts. Some men staid down 20 hours at a stretch, but did not work all the time, and Superintendent Haskins once staid down 24 hours. The sensations experienced are peculiar. When a man first steps in, there is a tingling in the ears and a pain in the head, and when he talks it is apparently through the nose. This is caused by the pressure, and the remedy is to hold the nose, close the mouth and blow against the ears. This relieves the pain and stops the sensation. When the pressure is all on, the worker feels all right and experiences no discomfort. Then there is a sort of exhilaration, and a man does more work in the lock than he could do outside.

Another peculiar thing about the action of the pressure is that a man may have liquor enough aboard when outside to just make him feel jolly, but when he steps into the lock he is as drunk as a loon. The danger lies in coming out of the pressure into the open air. It is then that a man is apt to suffer from stagnation of the blood and paralysis, caused by the change of atmosphere. Besides this a man may be attacked in the head or stomach with severe pains. Three out of five cases where the head and stomach are attacked result fatally.

Another severe malady resulting from the change is what is called the bends. This is the air getting in between the flesh and the bone. It is extremely painful and so severe that a quart of whisky administered in half an hour would not intoxicate the patient. The stagnation and paralysis are the worst dangers and do the work quickly. Many men have been keeled over by these causes, and not a few die. Old timers at the business sometimes get caught. Mr. Rapier himself was twice attacked. The remedy for this paralysis is a quick return to the air lock. The effect of the pressure varies on animals, as is shown by the mules used in the Hudson river tunnel. Some of these beasts are kept at work down below for a year, and on being brought up are worth more than when they were taken down. Others that had only been in the works four months had to be killed.

The men as a general thing do not remain a great many years at the business, and a man should never work at it after he is 40 years of age. Cutting a hole and building a tunnel through water is an extremely difficult thing and by many was thought to be impossible. Still it was done in the case of the Hudson river tunnel, and the method, as told by Mr. Rapier, is very interesting. The work on the tunnel had progressed until a body of water was struck. How to tunnel through this hole of water was a puzzling question. It was done in this way. A so called balloon was constructed by making a netting of wire rope and covering this netting with canvas. The interior of the balloon was then filled with blue clay and salt bay. When filled, the balloon, 30 feet in diameter, weighed 140 tons. The hole of water was then located, and with the aid of a huge steam derrick the balloon was dropped into the hole. Then several scowloads of dirt were dumped down on to the balloon, and the whole thing was left to settle.

At the end of ten days the work of cutting through the balloon was begun. This was a very difficult job. An idea of what hard cutting it was may be gained from the fact that it took two months to dig through the 30 feet. The plates and brick were going in as the work progressed.—Boston Herald.

BERNHARDT AND SARDOU.

The Quarrel and Reconciliation of the Dramatist and Actress.

Speaking of Sardou and Bernhardt, the following story concerning the great French actress and the equally renowned playwright is vouched for by the correspondent of The Courrier des Etats-Unis:

The two who have achieved the greatest triumph in "Gismonda," M. Victorien Sardou and Mme. Sarah Bernhardt, were at swords' points in the beginning. This dislike dated from "Daniel Rochet," which Sardou gave to the Comedie Francaise after his nomination to the French academy. Sarah Bernhardt expected that Sardou would select her to create the role of heroine in the play, but he chose Mlle. Bertet instead; hence the anger of Mme. Bernhardt. When the actress and the author met, the former passed on the other side; the latter pulled his hat down over his eyes. Each murmured something not at all complimentary to the other.

Then Sarah Bernhardt left the Comedie Francaise, went to America, where she made her first triumphal tour, and returned to France. Upon her arrival in Paris she entered into negotiations with Raymond Deslande, manager of the Vaudeville. She asked nothing better than to play there. But what should she play? She did not wish to return to classical roles. She wanted an entirely new play, which should bring out all her qualities.

"There is only one man who can write the play you want," said Deslande. "That man is Sardou."

"Sardou!" cried the actress. "Such a disposition, incapable of doing justice to an artist. Moreover, irritable, brutal, a man who runs up against everybody, who"—

"Very well," replied Deslande, "let us say no more about it." He went to see Sardou and told him that he must have a play for Sarah Bernhardt.

"Sarah!" exclaimed the writer. "Sarah! Such a disposition! Crabbed, disagreeable, quarreling with everybody, who"—

"Very well, very well, it is quite understood."

And three months after Sardou read "Fedora" to Sarah, who, radiant, threw herself on the author's neck in the presence of Deslande.

"Ah! Deslande," said Sardou, "what did I tell you? How gentle she is! How sweet! How adorable!"

"And he!" rejoined Bernhardt. "How amiable he is! How he appreciates real talent, and how obliging! Embrace me, Raymond!"

CAT ELECTRICITY.

Those Who Rely on It For Curative Purposes Can Get It In Other Ways.

The London Lancet says:

The electrical effect produced by rubbing a cat's back is of course well known. It is also well known that this is frictional electricity, or, perhaps more correctly, the electricity of contact; that it is a surface effect produced by the rubbing; that it does not point to pre-existing electricity stored in the body of the animal, and that the person who, having concluded a massage, sinks into a chair declaring that his exhaustion is consequent on the loss of "the living galvanism" which he has imparted to the patient is a charlatan.

It is to be remembered that friction between any dissimilar substances always produces electricity, and in illustration of this the electrical effect sometimes produced in a dry atmosphere when the hair is combed on the body quickly divested of a flannel jersey may be instanced, or the classic experiment of rubbing a stick of sealing wax on a rabbit's fur may be called to mind. Those who are accustomed to rely on the curative effect of stroking a cat's back may find consolation in the last named experiment, inasmuch as it teaches them that when their "feline favorite" is no more health and strength may still be secured by gentle friction on its skin.

Apart, however, from questions of electro-physiology, it is instructive to learn that the presence of white in the color of a cat, unless the animal be whole colored, is a sign of weakness.

Promotion.

"How's that boy o' yourn gettin along in the city, Josiah?" asked one farmer of another.

"He's workin his way up right along."

"What's he doin?"

"He's workin fer the city."

"You don't tell me! What's he doin fer it?"

"He's drivin one o' them things they call a street sweeper—kind o' wipes up the road nights, you know. But, my, he's bein promoted! Fust off be wus workin in the Twenty-fust ward. By an by he writ me that he was workin in the Eighteenth ward. Last week he writ that he was in the Tw'lfth ward now, an, I swan, you see if that feller don't fetch up in the Fust ward with his sweep cart yit!"—Youth's Companion.

Vandyke's Place In Art.

So far as portraiture goes, Vandyke occupies, with Titian and Velasquez, the first place. His works have an air of elegance and distinction and a mundane grace and courtliness naturally befitting his title of "painter to the king." The Italians called him "il pittore cavalieresco." Without the stamina and natural robustness of his great master, Rubens, his portraits are better in point of refinement and grace. But one must know his master to form a just appreciation of his position.—T. Cole in Century.

A comparison of the maximum temperature in different parts of the world shows that the great desert of Africa is by far the hottest. This vast plain, which extends 2,000 miles from east to west and 1,000 from north to south, has a temperature of 150 degrees F. in the hottest days of summer.

Intense Suffering From Salt Rheum—Given Up as Hopeless

A Permanent CURE by Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Miss Blanche Clark
Duluth, Minn.

"Seven years ago our daughter Blanche, then four years of age, had a humor break out on her hands and face, which our physician pronounced eczema. She seemed to derive no benefit at all and if the cold air reached her face or hands, they would swell up at once and look almost purple, and headed blisters would form and break, discharging a watery substance and that attended it would drive the child nearly wild. Unless we encased her little hands she would tear patches of skin from her face and hands. The itching was intense. We tried many doctors and many remedies and at last gave up the case as hopeless. But in the summer of '91 our daughter Cora tried Hood's Sarsaparilla, to cure a scrofulous lump near the left breast, which caused her much pain and difficulty at times in breathing. After taking four bottles it entirely disappeared. Blanche, who is now eleven, had spent seven years of suffering, so I concluded to give her Hood's Sarsaparilla. She commenced the middle of June to take the medicine and at this writing has started on her fifth bottle. Her face is smooth and soft as baby's,

Her hands are soft and white, where four months ago they were blue and red and calloused nearly like leather. I cannot express my gratitude by pen or month. It seems a miracle and our friends are surprised." MRS. ANNA L. CLARK, 401 East 4th St., Duluth, Minnesota.

CHARACTER IN WINDOW SHADES.

They Tell Tales About the Inmates of the House, a Young Woman Says.

"I don't know anything about the front of a house that more clearly indicates the character and condition of the inmates than the window shades," said a young woman of observation. "If you see the shades all drawn down to precisely the same level in every window, you can tell at once that the house is occupied by a single family and that the mistress is of a severely orderly spirit. There'll not be a thing out of its accustomed place in that house, you can rest assured. If the shades of all the up stairs windows are drawn down to the top of the bottom sash, while those of the parlor are drawn clear down, you can safely judge the family of that house to be one of those essentially domestic ones that live mostly up stairs, where the bedroom is at once the wife's sewing room and the husband's library and where the parlor is only opened on state occasions. If the bedroom window blinds in the middle story are half way down while those on the top floor and of the parlor are away up, you won't be wrong in saying that that house is ruled by the young folks, who are going to have a flood of sunshine in their bedrooms even if it does fade out the matting and who are not going to have the parlor smelling like a musty old church.

"The room with that one window blind run clear up to the top is occupied by a man, and if you see the window shades at different heights you take it for granted that they have let lodgings there or that the housekeeping is of a decidedly frowsy character. One of the most unfailingly indicative shades is that which runs diagonally across the window, with one corner close under the roller and the other half away down the sash. The woman of that window is a slattern, and it's babies to bodkins that the growler is rarely empty there.

"These are, of course, only the broad indications of the character reading that may be done from the position and wag of the eyelids of a house, for I suppose it is not forcing a figure of speech to say that if the windows are the eyes of a house the shades are the lids and can be held primly straight or give a drunken wink."—New York Sun.

HUNTING PYTHONS IN NATAL.

Burn Forests and Dig Pits to Capture the Immense Reptiles.

The colony of Natal, South Africa, abounds in boa constrictors and pythons. While they do not attack men they are especially destructive of cattle, sheep and oxen, and for this reason parties are formed by hunters and natives to burn the bush and forest in order to exterminate the pests. Some of the soldiers at Pietermaritzburg were recently informed by a party of neighboring Zulus of the whereabouts of a huge python that had been destroying their oxen.

The soldiers, with 200 natives, started off to capture the snake, and having located it the forest was fired for about a mile roundabout, an enormous pit having been previously dug in toward the center of the inclosed space. What with the burning brush and the shouts of the Kaffirs they soon drove the reptile toward the pit, where, closing in upon him, they forced him into it. The python proved to be of enormous size, being 32 feet long and 41 inches in circumference. It appeared to be quite stupid or dazed, having just eaten a young ox that had been led into the inclosure.

An enormous cage, with iron bars half way down the front, having been constructed, the snake was got out of the pit and taken to Maritzburg in the cage. Here it is kept on exhibition at the barracks, and it is fed twice a week two Kaffir goats at each meal. It will not eat anything that has been already killed for it, preferring to kill its food itself. The goats are thrust through a small door at the end of the cage alive, when, fixing its great eyes upon them, the snake suddenly lunges forward and crushes them in its powerful folds. After covering them with a thick slime almost an inch deep before swallowing, it flattens them out by squeezing them and then swallows them almost at a gulp. After this the python goes to sleep and does not awake until it is time to feed again.—London Telegraph.

I and You.

Miss Frances Power Cobbe tells a story in her autobiography which well illustrates that even to intelligent and forceful persons I is big and you very small: "At one of the pleasant gatherings at Mrs. Peter Taylor's, which will not be forgotten by those who had the good fortune to be invited on her open evenings at Aubrey house, Miss Mary Carpenter remarked, 'It is a thousand pities that everybody will not join and give the whole of their minds to the great cause of the age, because if they would we should carry it undoubtedly.' 'What is the great cause of the age?' we simultaneously exclaimed. 'Parliamentary reform?' said our host, Mr. Peter Taylor; 'The abolition of slavery?' said Miss Redmond, a negress, Mrs. Taylor's companion; 'Teetotalism?' said another; 'Woman's suffrage?' said another; 'The conversion of the world to Theism?' said I. In the midst of the clamor Miss Carpenter looked serenely round. 'Why, the industrial school bill, of course.' No one enjoyed the joke, when we all began to laugh, more than the reformer herself."

Rings as Marks of Tree Growth.

Mr. James Stewart, one of the most intelligent horticulturists of the south, says in a note on the annual ring growth of trees that he knew a case of a tree 25 years old which, when cut down, exhibited 75 concentric rings. The name of the tree is not given.—Meehan's Monthly.

A WANT.

I'm looking for some pretty girl,
  Of modest, quiet mien,
Who dresses well, knows how to spell
  And has a wit that's keen.

I want no fickle weather vane
  That turns with every wind.
I think a blond would suit me best;
  She must be swell, refined.

She must be constant as a star—
  No meteor would do—
And, like her own sweet little self,
  Her grammar must be true.

Yet more, if she would be with me
  (Excuse the slang) right "in it,"
She must be able to take down
  One hundred words a minute.

LINCOLN AND M'CLELLAN.

The Latter Was Kept In Command Because of Public Feeling.

Just before the battle of Chancellorsville I visited the Army of the Potomac, its headquarters being then at Falmouth, in President Lincoln's company. We were detained en route by a storm and spent one night on board the steamer anchored in the Potomac. In the course of conversation that evening the president was communicative and in a confidential mood and discussed the military situation with much freedom. Speaking of McClellan he said, "I kept McClellan in command after I had expected that he would win victories simply because I knew that his dismissal would provoke popular indignation and shake the faith of the people in the final success of the war."

Very soon after the battle of Chancellorsville and before the battle of Gettysburg was fought the old rumor of McClellan's recall again got upon its legs, to the great consternation of many of Lincoln's friends in Washington. This report was more than usually vigorous and plausible. Hooker's failure at Chancellorsville and the blow which his military prestige had suffered in consequence gave public opinion a decidedly sharp fillip. One evening, while this rumor was gaining strength, I chanced to be in the family sitting room at the White House, where the president, Mrs. Lincoln and several callers were assembled, when an indiscreet young lady directly attacked Lincoln with the extraordinary question:

"Mr. President, is McClellan going to be recalled to the command of the Army of the Potomac?"

The president good naturedly parried this home thrust, but gave no satisfactory answer. Afterward joining in the conversation, I intimated to the president that as he had not settled the matter there probably might be some ground for the general suspicion that McClellan would be recalled. Lincoln, who sat near me, put on a very severe look, and turning said in an undertone, "And you too?" I instantly recalled our conversation on the steamer and apologized for my lack of faith. He then added, "I see you remember the talk we had on the Carrie Martin."—Noah Brooks in Century.

Russian Justice.

General Van Wahl, chief constable of the police of St. Petersburg, when he was governor at Kiev, received a visit one day from a poor woman, widow of a police agent who had fallen a victim to duty. For a long time she had solicited the pension which was due her. The head of the police to whom she had addressed her demand paid no attention to her plea.

In her distress the widow went to the governor and told him her story.

"Ah, yes, we'll see what can be done," said General Wahl. "Sit down there and write what I tell you," pointing to a writing table.

The widow took a seat and wrote from the governor's dictation a long supplication. "Now address it," he said, "and wait for me in the next room."

A few minutes later the woman was recalled, and the general gave into her hands a sealed letter, saying the while to her, "Take this letter to the head constable, take care not to open it, and come back to me as soon as you have a reply."

A week afterward the woman appeared at the palace again. Her pension had been granted, and she thanked the governor with joy.

"It is useless to thank me. I am nothing in the affair," said he, and immediately gave the following order:

"The head of the police at Kiev is dismissed from his post and sent into exile; the reason, because he granted a demand after receiving a sum of money for so doing."

General Wahl had, unknown to the woman, slipped into her letter a bank note for 25 rubles, which accounted for her supplication being granted.—Youth's Companion.

A Big Calculation In Water.

The ocean, sea and lake surface of our planet is estimated at something like 145,000,000 square miles, with an average depth of 12,000 feet, and is calculated to contain not less than 3,270,600,000,000,000 tons of water. The rivers of the earth are estimated to have a flow sufficient to cover 36 cubic miles of the above area each day. Now, if all the oceans were suddenly dried and the rivers could keep up their present rate of flow, which, of course, they could not without ocean evaporation, it would take 3,500 years to refill the basin.—St. Louis Republic.

Puzzled.

"Answer by return male" was the way the letter wound up that Miss Footlites received from Mr. Suddenrox. "I wonder," said she, "whether he means by the messenger boy or by post."—Indianapolis Journal.

A RETIRED BUSINESS WOMAN.

A Page From Her History.

The important experiences of others are interesting. The following is no exception: "I had been troubled with heart disease 25 years, much of that time very seriously. For five years I was treated by one physician continuously. I was in business, but obliged to retire on account of my health. A physician told my friends that I could not live a month. My feet and limbs were badly swollen, and I was indeed in a serious condition when a gentleman directed my attention to Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure, and said that his sister, who had been afflicted with heart disease, had been cured by the remedy, and was again a strong, healthy woman. I purchased a bottle of the Heart Cure, and in less than an hour after taking the first dose I could feel a decided improvement in the circulation of my blood. When I had taken three doses I could move my ankles, something I had not done for months, and my limbs had been swollen so long that they seemed almost putrified. Before I had taken one bottle of the New Heart Cure the swelling had all gone down, and I was so much better that I did my own work. On my recommendation six others are taking this valuable remedy."—Mrs. Morgan, 569 W. Harrison St., Chicago, Ill.

And it appearing, by said petition, that there is not sufficient personal estate in the hands of said Elsie H. Spendley to pay said debts, the legacies or expenses of administration, and that it is necessary for the payment of such debts, legacies or expenses, to sell the whole of said real estate;

IT IS THEREFORE ORDERED, That all persons interested in said estate, appear before this Court, on Monday, the 4th day of February, 1895 at 10 o'clock, A. M., at the Probate office in the City of Crookston, in said county, then and there to show cause (if there be any) why license should not be granted to said Elsie H. Spendley to sell so much of the real estate of said deceased as shall be necessary to pay such debts, legacies and expenses.

AND IT IS FURTHER ORDERED, That this order shall be published once in each week for three successive weeks prior to said day of hearing, in the POLK COUNTY JOURNAL, a weekly newspaper printed and published at Crookston, in said county.

THIEF RIVER FALLS ITEMS.

[From The Press.]

A. W Brash, of Britton, N, D., was in the city the first of the week looking for a flour mill opening.

Our city was represented at the county seat this week by Attorney Richardson, C. Kretzshmar, Phil Zeh and C. J. Knox, Revival services have been in progress at the M. E. church during the week under the direction of Rev. C. E. Davenport.

Maj. Jones of St. Paul, government engineer, was in the city Monday in the interest of the surveying of the Red Lake River, with a view of obtaining from Congress an appropriation for cleaning the river.

We are informed by Mr. Nicolas Nelson that a meeting was held at Thief Lake on New Years day for the purpose of organizing a new school district in that section. The new district, if organized, will comprise a territory four miles square and will give educational privileges to a large settlement now entirely isolated. There is also much talk of the establishment of a post-office at the lake. The people up there are by no means dead to their future welfare.

The following is clipped from the Post News of Alexandria, where Dr. Lankester installed the officers in the I. O. O. F. lodge for 1895: "Dr. Lankester made a short address which was well received. The doctor is a dignified, distinguished looking gentleman, and is, by the way, a physician of great ability. His remarks were bright and earnest, full of the true spirit of Odd-Fellowship and must have been to those unacquainted with this great order a surprise as showing what a magnificent, benevolent work it is doing and on what sincerely fraternal foundations the order rests.

East Grand Forks News.

(From the Courier.)

District Court is in session this week. An adjourned term and many of our citizens are in attendance. If we only had telephone connections with the court house at Crookston how pleasant it would be.

There is no use of further denying the fact—Polk county has got to be divided. Then we can have our own grand jury, don't you see?

The amount of money spent in Crookston this week by citizens of East Grand Forks, who have been called hence would capitalize a national bank.

Somebody has said that there is nothing so hard as the beginning, unless perhaps, the end. Let us pray that the present grand jury will not give us a practical illustration.

Since the grand jury commenced its labors at Crookston, on Tuesday, of this week, there has not been at any time enough able-bodied men left in the city to run out and man the fire engine in case of fire. Such a state of affairs should not exist.

Jacob Lobsinger has had another severe attack of his old complaint, neuralgia of the heart, and for the past ten days has been in a critical condition. His condition has greatly improved during the past few days, and hopes are now entertained that he will soon be himself again.

William Ryan, working on the farm of Thomas Fraser, four miles north of town, is down with a second attack of brain fever, and is dangerously ill.

Tommy Ahearn's colt is fast developing speed, and good judges of horse flesh say that there is a possibility that Tommy's steed may yet lower the record.

Neil McCoy returned on Saturday from a two months' visit to Arnprior, Canada, and reports times in the queen's domain as being hard. Mr. McCoy is nearly ninety years of age, and is as chipper as a young man of thirty. He informed the writer that while in Canada he attended "many a party," and danced as much as anyone.

Better AND Cheaper.

THE ROYAL BAKING POWDER is more economical than other brands because of its greater leavening strength, as shown by both the U. S. and Canadian Government Reports.

The other baking powders contain from 20 to 80 per cent. less leavening gas than the ROYAL. So the ROYAL, even should it cost more than the others, would be much the cheaper.

In addition to this the superior flavor, sweetness, wholesomeness and delicacy of the food raised by ROYAL BAKING POWDER would make any difference in cost insignificant.

Highest of all in leavening strength.—

SIGNAL TRIUMPHS WON

By Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder.

Two signal triumph have been achieved by Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder. First it received Highest Award and Diploma at the World's Columbian Exposition of 1893. Next it secured Highest Award and Gold Medal at the California Midwinter Fair of 1894. At both Fairs it surpassed all competitors in every respect. The award, in each instance, was for strongest leaving power, perfect purity and general excellence. It was sustained by the unanimous vote of the judges.

The victory at Chicago establishes the supremacy of Dr. Price's as "The Foremost Baking Powder in the World." The triumph at San Francisco confirms and emphasizes it.

FOSSTON FANCIES.

(From the Thirteen Towns.)

P. H. Pederson spent the early part of the week in Crookston visiting friends and relatives.

Chas. Baumann left for Grand Forks last Saturday for a visit with relatives. He will return on Tuesday.

W. J. Hilligoss came up on his railroad bicycle from Crookston, on Monday evening, leaving again on the train Tuesday.

Another unlucky man, named Ole Olson, was brought down from Steenerson's lumber camps on Saturday of last week with a broken leg. He is awaiting recovery at the Fosston house.

Attorney B. S. Bennett returned home yesterday from Crookston, where he had been attending district court.

A number of settlers from Black Duck River country go to St. Cloud on Tuesday to file on timber claims, among whom will be Miss Mae Reed. Messrs. I. Erickson, Af Hainer and Mr. Coburn.

Deputy Marshals Funk and Morrison returned to Red Lake on Tuesday with two culprits charged with selling liquor to Indians on the reservation. They left for Crookston on the same day, where the offenders will be brought before the U. S. commissioner.

Oscar H. Olson left for Crookston yesterday, where he will take the place of Geo. F. Carpenter, in the office of Larsen & Carpenter, during the latter's absence on an extended trip to St. Paul, Chicago and Tennessee. Mr. Olsen will remain in Crookston several weeks, P. W. Carpenter remaining in charge of the branch here.

C. H. Bjornerud, a farmer living about four miles west of town drove in last Saturday to do some trading and tied his team to a post at Hillestad & Blyberg's corner. When the train pulled out one of the team, a fine, four-year-old black mare, became frightened, climbing upon the sidewalk in front of the post, and by some means impaled herself upon the stake and was killed.

The Common Cold.

Medical writers have recently called attention to the fact that the common cold, which most people suppose they "catch" by undue exposure, though they cannot, for the life of them tell how or when, is frequently the result of a debilitated condition of the body, and that the head-ache, catarrhal trouble, sore throat and other accompaniments of a cold are signs of an impure condition of the blood. This explanation is at least reasonable, and it is desirable that it should be understood, as it points to the proper and only method by which this uncomfortable and in many instances, dangerous condition may be avoided or overcome. It is not uncommon to hear people remark that they suffer constantly with "a cold" from early fall until the warm weather returns in the spring. This is undoubtedly due to the fact that the system is weakened, that it lacks vitality, is poorly nourished and can not resist the severer trials that come with the coming of fall and winter weather.

Of course the remedy for these ailments, and the preventive, if they have not already made their encroachments, consists in a course of treatment which will build up and strengthen the physical system. In the first place the blood must be purified and invigorated so that it can carry health and vitality to all the organs of the body, enabling the heart and lungs, the liver, bowels and skin to perform their proper functions. The digestive organs must then be stimulated and strengthened and made to do their part in supplying the wasted and much needed strength to the system.

For the work of purifying the blood and giving strength and vitality to the system, nothing has yet been found equal to Hood's Sarsaparilla. The burden of the testimonials from people who have taken Hood's Sarsaparilla is that it purifies their blood, removes pimples, boils and all similar eruptions, gives them an appetite and makes them feel strong. This is just what is needed to fortify the system against that condition for which people in general have no better name than a "cold." A few bottles of Hood's Sarsaparilla taken at this season would be sufficient to give that tone and stimulus to the organs of the body which are indispensable to health, especially in trying weather, and certainly, a few dollars expended now in taking measures to prevent sickness or even the discomforts of a long continued "cold" would be better than a fit of sickness and heavy doctor's bills later on. In buying medicine, as in buying anything else, it is well to see that you get an honest article, and such Hood's Sarsaparilla is everywhere recognized to be.

"Critical Days"

Professor Rudolph Falb, of Leipsic, Germany, maintains as a scientific theory that great atmospheric disturbances, shocks of earthquakes, and explosions, are so strikingly coincident with the most extensive oceanic tides as to warrant the belief that the same cause, planetary influence, produces both. These periods of planetary conjunction Professor Falb term "critic days." The individual constellations affecting an increase of these forces are: First, the perigee—that is, the time when moon and earth are nearest to one another; second the moon's equatorial position; third, the perihelion, when our globe is nearest the sun; fourth, the sun's equatorial position; fifth, syzygies, or new moon and full moon; sixth, the lunar or solar eclipses. The following are the "critial days." for 1895: Of the first order, Sept. 18, March 11, Aug. 20, Feb. 9, Oct. 18, April 9, and July 22. Of the second order, May 9, Nov. 16, March 26, April 25, Dec. 31, Oct. 14 Feb. 24 June 22, Sept. 4 and Nov. 2. Of the third order, May 24, Dec, 16 June 7, Aug. 5 and July 7. Of other "critical days," are the one on which you select your route for a railroad journey, and much of comfort and safety may depend upon your choice. A wise selection will always include "The Burlington," as it insures the best accommodations and the most prompt connections, besides reaching, with its seven thousand miles of track, all prominent cities and towns of the West. DISTRICT COURT.

THURSDAY MORNING, JAN. 24.

Immediately after court convened H. Steenerson, Esq., appeared for the defendants in the whiskey cases at Fertile, Peterson and Ostley and acknowledged that they were indicted by their true names; waived the reading of the indictments and moved to set aside each indictment, on the ground that they were not found by any legally organized or authorized grand jury; and for the further reason no witnesses were examined before the said grand jury when said indictments were found. These were the same cases that were re-submitted to the grand jury, after having been demurred to by defendants' counsel. They were referred back to correct an error as to the fixing of the date. The first indictment stated "on or about" the 14th of January. The motion was denied.

The defendants entered their plea to each of the seven indictments; (1) that they have already been acquitted of the charge of the indictment; (2) that they were "not guilty." The cases were continued until the next general term. The parties gave bail for appearance in the sum of $300 in each indictment.

The question of the legality and sufficiency of the grand jury being the main point at issue, in these cases, it has been agreed by the court, upon the application of attorney Steenerson, to certify that question to the supreme court, to pass upon before the cases are tried. Upon this decision hangs the result of the present investigation.

The case of the town of Tynsid vs. the town of Roome was called for trial. A. A. Miller for plaintiff and H. Steenerson for defendant. On account of some of the very important witnesses being absent, it was finally agreed to continue the case until the first day of the next general term of court.

The case of Agnes Findlayson vs. the town of Angus was settled. A. A. Miller for plaintiff and Ed. George for defendant.

THURSDAY AFTERNOON.

The grand jury reported nine indictments, the contents of which and against whom found is not known to the public. It is generally rumored that they are against the people of East Grand Forks. The parties are not under arrest yet. No other cases on docket for to-day.

FRIDAY MORNING, JAN. 25.

Court convened at 10 o'clock and took up the case of Windoline Luxemberg vs John E. Quesnelle. L. E Gossman and R. J. Montagne counsel for plaintiff and H. Steenerson for defendant. This action is an appeal from justice court. Plaintiff sues to eject defendant from the the south half of the northwest quarter of section 1, town 149, range 43, being in the town of Grove Park. It appears that plaintiff made filing on said land on Nov. 3, 1885; that defendant also made filing on said land Nov. 26, 1885, and claims settlement and improvements on Nov. 20, 1885. After, when final proof was to be made the case was contested before the United States land office here and decided in favor of plaintiff. Defendant appealed to the Secretary of the Interior, at Washington, where the case was again decided in favor of plaintiff. Defendant again appeals; and now sets up fraud on the part of the plaintiff in obtaining final proof.

The case was finished this afternoon and the court rendered his decision in favor of the plaintiff, that he is entitled to the possession of the land. The defendant has made some improvement and lived on the land since 1885, claiming title. The plaintiff also made improvements.

SATURDAY, JAN. 26.

The cases of Charles L. Brown and John Parker, vs. McFadden & Anderson were the next on docket. Appeal from justice court. L. E. Gossman appearing for plaintiff. No appearance for defendant in either case; judgment was ordered for plaintiff.

The case of Wm. Ross vs. Joseph Eidelbes, John Hovel, defendants, Frank Holhar, et al garnishee, and Aultman, Taylar & Co., intervenor, was next called. A. R. Holston appeared for plaintiff and L. E. Gossman, for intervenor. It appears that defendants Eidelbes and Hoval bought a separator from the intervenor, A., T. & Co., taking some sort of contract that one-third of the threshing should be collected by them to pay the running expenses of the machine. It also appears that they, being ignorant of the English language, did not know what the contract was until some length of time after the machine had been running, and until A., T. & Co. had collected most of the money for threshing. They refused to run the machine last fall. The plaintiff was the feeder for the machine and sues to get pay for his work. After hearing the evidence the court decided the case in favor of the plaintiff.

May Fowler, one of the East Grand Forks indicted, appeared in court. Her attorney, H. Steenerson, moved to dismiss the indictment on the ground that the grand jury was not a legal one. Motion was overruled. He then demurred to the indictment, which was overruled. He then entered a plea of "not guilty." The case was set for the next general term. Her bond was fixed at $1,000 with a promise of good behavior pending trial, attached.

MONDAY, JAN. 28, 1895.

Court convened at 10 a. m. The first case called was that of Casper Tylden vs. Martha Anderson. Case continued by stipulation. Soon after convening the grand jury came before the court and Foreman Childs asked the court in reference to indicting officers of the law, who, knowing the existence of evil practices, refrained from repressing those practices. He said there was a question in the minds of some of the jurors as to what extent of dereliction in duty would have to be shown, the nature of the dereliction and the nature of the duty they might be derelict in and not be amenable to the grand jury for laxity. We, your honor, have come to inquire our duty in these matters.

The court then read from the statute the duty of mayors and chiefs of police; the same as was given in the first charge. He said further: "The duty of chief of police, or the person designated by the mayor to act as chief of police, has to carry out and perform the duties imposed upon him by the mayor. And in the absence of orders from the mayor the acting chief of police must perform the duties imposed upon him by law, and when he sees a person in the act of committing crime, or disobeying the law, it is his duty to arrest him and take him before justice or magistrate for examination." Court then read from the criminal code regarding the duties of public officers holding public trusts.

"The question for you to consider is whether or not the law of the statutes has been broken; whether or not it has been kept by the mayors. If you find from the evidence you have that the laws have been permitted to be broken by the executive officers and the police officers of the cities, it is your duty to indict those persons who have permitted it to be done; if you believe, having knowledge of the fact, that they wilfully, carelessly, negligently and corruptly allowed these evil practices to be perpetrated in their jurisdiction they were governing. There can be no misunderstanding in this if you depend fully upon whether or not you find such unlawful practices have been carried on. If they have been carried on, and if the mayor and chief of police had knowledge of it or had reasonable grounds to believe such things were carried on, and they did not stop it, then they are guilty under the law. If they had knowledge sufficient to warrant them stopping it in one case and allowed it to be carried on in another, they are guilty of failure to perform their duty as executive officers."

Foreman Childs then put a question to the court: "Supposing that John Jones was the chief of police of a certain city, and he went to one Sally Smith who was keeping a house of prostitution and told her that she would have to close that house. After twenty-four hours, under protest from some of his friends, he went back and told her she could open up again, would that be an indictable offense, giving her permission to open up her house?"

The court replied: "I think it would. The law does not allow anybody to carry on such practices. It strictly forbids houses of prostitution and gambling, and the mayor and city council has no right to allow or permit such things to be done. If they do permit it they lay themselves liable to be indicted.

The court touched on the question of expense of this jury; remarking that a good deal was being said on that point. The court thought an ounce of prevention worth a pound of cure, and that it was better and less expensive to stop the lawlessness now, if it were possible, than to allow it to go on without restrictions for a few years and have a few murder trials on hand, the result of such laxity of enforcing the law. If it is dollars and cents it is better to stop it now We should get rid of the idea that the dollar rules the country. Dollars compared with a human soul ought to be of little worth. If it is a matter of business, and business is greater than humanity, is worth, then it is right to carry on these things. Law and order is what we desire, and it is our duty to protect our citizens and stop these bad practices as soon as possible, if it does cost the county a few dollars to stop it.

M. R. Brown asked the court if the grand jury was clothed with power to bring in indictments where the evidence was not sufficient to warrant conviction, some of the evidence being hearsay.

The court replied that they must rely solely upon evidence and not hearsay.

Mr. Brown then asked if it was advisable to bring in indictments upon evidence that they did not believe would convict, simply to persecute the parties; believing if the said parties be brought before the court they would be discharged. The Court replied that it was not the object of this court or grand jury to persecute anybody. Persecute and prosecute are different things. You must first find if an offense has been committed, and then there must be sufficient evidence before you to lead you to believe that the person charged with committing the offense committed it. Mr. Childs then asked the question: "What is testimony in the eyes of the law?" citing the case of John Jones and Sally Smith, wherein Jones required of Sally Smith a certain amount of money every month as a fine, granting her permission to run her house of prostitution, said fine to be turned into the city treasury. Would that be evidence that he knew of the existence of that house of prostitution?"

Court—I think it would.

Mr. Brown—Would that be evidence that he had knowledge of the law?

Court—The law says every man is presumed to know the law, and it is presumed that officers know the law."

The jury then retired.

The New Boy.

The sensation of London and New York is "The New Boy." It is sending a laugh around the world. Even in far away Australia, where the cherries grow inside the stones, it is the sensation of the year. Think of the plot and laugh! The proprietor of a fashionable school is in love with a handsome young "widow." He makes her the matron, wills her his fortune, that she may not marry again. He expects to marry her himself. There is a boy in the school who paints things red. The bullies make him steal apples and play pranks, and finally he is arrested while flirting with the villains daughter. After a lot of dark-eyed love-making there is a discovery. The boy is really the husband of the matron. The Creator made him little, he can't help it. So they took him for a boy. The scenes that follow the discovery make the audiences roar with applause. The young man has saved the doctor's fortune and every sentence in the play is a surprise and a joy. It will be seen at the Crookston opera house on Thursday evening, Feb. 7th.

Another Braw Scot.

On Wednesday of last week as that genial Scotchman, Tommy Johnston, was about to enter his domicile to partake of another well-earned meal his ears were salated by a yell from within like unto a whole regiment of Comanche Indians, which just raised every hair on his bald head to a perpendicular in no time. "Scots wha' ha' wi' Wallace bled, what's that!" said Tommy. "Have they transformed the house intil a salvation army barracks, or what the dickens is to pay I wonder, and he dashed in only to be met by a smiling nurse girl with a bunch of woolens in her arms that she proceeded to introduce to papa Tommy as "Tommy Johnston Jr." Tommy says the youngster is a born politician or an auctioneer, judging from the excess of lung power he possesses.

SHALL WHEAT BE KING.

Writing on this topic in the St. Paul Globe A. B. Stickney says:—

Can wheat be profitably raised at the present market value? It depends upon how it is cultivated. If upon an exclusive wheat farm, where the value of the farmer's time and the cost of feeding his teams, the interest of the value of his farm and the interest and depreciation on farm machinery for the whole year must be charged against the cost of the wheat crop, and the land is so exhausted from continued crops that it produces only twelve or less bushels per acre—under such conditions a wheat crop, at present prices, will result in a loss, instead of a profit, to the producers.

On the other hand, if it is grown on a farm with other crops and with stock, so that the farmer's time can be completely utilized, where, say, only one quarter of the value of the farmer's services, interest and depreciation, etc., is chargeable to the wheat crop, and the land is in such good condition, resulting from rotation of crops, fertilization and superior cultivation, as to produce thirty bushels per acre—under such conditions a wheat crop at present prices is profitable. Under a mixed system of agriculture, it does not cost so much to cultivate an acre as on a wheat specialty farm, for the reason that the different varieties of crops are not planted or harvested at the same period of the season, and thus the farmer utilizes more of his own labor and the labor of his teams, and the land will produce more wheat per acre, because, by keeping stock and rotating the crops the lands are both "rested" and fertilized.

The history of agriculture proves that in the long run those section, produce the most profit where the farms are small and produce a variety of crops and live stock. The history of the southern counties of this state also proves this theory. A most reliable farmer living in Goodhue county told me a few days since that last year he raised thirty bushels of wheat per acre on land that a few years ago failed to produce six bushels per acre. This wonderful transformation was brought about by a few years of diversified farming. I asked him if his neighbors have had the same experience, and he said they have His crops of oats, barley and flax were correspondingly large and his dairy was equally profitable.

The profit in wheat raising depends upon the yield per acre, the cost of cultivation being substantially the same if the yield is ten or thirty bushels per acre. About 200 years ago the soil of England had become so exhausted by exclusive wheat farming that the average crop of wheat was only six bushels per acre. By a system of mixed farming and by fertilization the average has been raised and maintained for a century or more at about forty bushels per acre.

The farmers of Goodhue county are estimated to have over $1,500,000 deposited in banks, accumulated by diversified farming, which wherever practiced has increased the yield per acre, the value of the land and the rofit of agriculture.

State Encampment, G. A. R.

The state encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic will be held at St. Paul on Wednesday and Thursday, Feb. 27th and 28th, 1895. Capt. Jack Mullen, Capt. A. H. Reed and Judge Eli Torrance are candidates for commander. If it was not for Capt. Jack Mullen we should say: "Get there, Eli."

A Starch Factory.

Red Lake Falls, Fertile, and several other places are talking up starch factory very earnestly and very hopefully. There is ample room for several starch factories in Polk county, but one would have a very stimulating affect upon the market prices for it would insure a reasonably good market all the time. Properly handled there is a profit in raising potatoes at prices that starch factories can pay. But you can't drop by hand and dig with a hoe and do it. Nor can you depend upon the hoe as the chief means of getting rid of the weeds in the patch during the summer, but with the proper machinery the farmer can make more money in potatoes than he ever did in wheat, if he has a sure market for his crop. The JOURNAL has advocated a starch factory for years.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

[From our Regular Correspondent.]

WASHINGTON, JAN. 25, 1895.

There may be Senators besides Gray of Delaware, and George, of Mississippi, who are in sympathy with Mr. Cleveland's policy towards Hawaii, but they are the only men in the Senate who have even pretended to defend that policy during the discussions which have been a feature of the "morning hour" in the Senate this week. Senator Hale has offered an amendment to the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill, appropriating $500,000 for the survey of a cable route connecting the Hawaiian Islands and the United States, and has given notice of his intention to press it to a vote before the bill is disposed of. From the sentiments of opposition expressed in connection with Mr. Cleveland's endorsement of the acquisition of one of the Hawaiian Islands by Great Britain, for a cable station, there appears to be a a good prospect for the adoption of Senator Hale's amendment.

Since the failure of Senator Ransom, on his financial mission as ambassador from the democratic Senators to His Majesty, Grover I., to bring about an agreement of any kind, those Senators appear to have adopted a sort of go-as-you-please, every-man-for-himself idea of the situation, and the result is the introduction of two financial bills, one by Senator Jones, of Ark., and the other by Senator Smith, of N. J., both providing for the issue of 3 per cent bonds up to $500,000,000; but there the resemblance stops. The Smith bill is for a non-partisan currency commission to make a report next December on changes which might be advantageously made in the currency system, while the Jones bill provides for the unlimited coinage of silver, the government to retain the difference between the market value of the bullion and the money coined, as seigniorage; the reduction of the tax on national bank currency to one-fourth of 1 per cent, and allows the banks to issue currency to the par value of the bonds they deposit with the Treasury.

Representative Stephenson, of Mich, gave a banquet this week in honor of Senator Burrows, which was attended by a number of the new Senator's former colleagues in the House and several of his outside friends, including ex-Congressman Ben. Butterworth, of Ohio. The Senatorial harness sits easily upon Mr. Burrows, who has never had an attack of that disease so common among those who are elevated by the votes of their constituents—the big head.

The House committee on the Judiciary, after examining Judge Ricks of Ohio, and one of the principal witnesses against him—a man who was dismissed from office by Judge Ricks—decided that the Judge had been guilty of nothing more serious than carelessness in making up his accounts and that there was no reason for his impeachment, a censure being sufficient punishment for him. This probably ends the matter although Representative Bailey, of Texas, still says he intends to try to get the House to adopt an impeachment resolution.

A decision of Assistant Secretary Reynolds, of the Interior department practically drops out 10,000 Missouri pensioners from the rolls, or, rather, it would drop them if Congress was not in session to prevent it. In al the pension laws previous to that of 1890, the provisional militia of Missouri, although it never was formally enrolled as a part of the regular U. S. army, has been recognized as a part of the army, which it actually was so far as the performance of duty was concerned, in the granting of pensions to those who served therein, and about 10,000 of them have been drawing pensions under the act of 1890; but Mr. Reynolds decides that they are not specifically mentioned in that act. A joint resolution was promptly introduced and passed placing these Missouri pensioners under the act of 1890, so as to save these veterans annoyance from the decision of Mr. Reynolds.

Public Printer Benedict has been called on for an explanation of his discharge of Union veterans without cause, in violation of law, and as the call is made by the U. S. Senate it will have to be answered. A bill has also been introduced in the Senate, by Senator Quay, to abolish the office of Public Printer, and elect a Congressional Printer, to superintend the work of the Government Printing office.

Two important court decisions were this week handed down in Washington. The first was from the U. S. Supreme court, declaring that the formation and operation of the sugar trust was not a violation of law, and was dissented from by Justice Harlan. The second was that of one of the local judges, denying the injunction which was asked for to prevent the collection of the income tax, on the ground that the law imposing that tax was unconstitutional, and holding that the income tax is valid. Notice of an appeal was given. Although the U. S. Supreme Court only a few years ago decided in favor of the constitutionality of an income tax it will have to decide it again it seems.

The Bottling Works.

J. H. Peterson has the improvements to his bottling works so far completed that he has discharged the force of carpenters who have been hammering and sawing down there for some time past. Henry has transformed the down stairs part of the stables and put in his engine and bottling works. In the rear of that he has an immense refrigerator with ice house above so arranged as to permit of the kegs rolling in from the outside of the building. The pop business occupies its old quarters upstairs in the building that was moved up last fall. Henry has put in a lot of expense and has everything in apple-pie order—the most complete establishment of the kind in the Northwest.

Buried By Relatives.

THE JOURNAL was misinformed as to Olson's burial being by the county—as the announcement appeared in these columns last week. THE JOURNAL had hardly been in the post office half an hour when one of Olson's friends jumped upon the neck of the JOURNAL editor and informed us in language more emphatic than polite that Mr. Olson's sister in Chicago sent a check for $40 to defray said expenses—and so they came until we were informed of that fact fifty or sixty times. THE JOURNAL gave the report upon what we considered reliable authority—and cheerfully makes the correction due. This incident shows the value of the JOURNAL columns as an advertising medium.

The Hutchinson Family.

Since 1840, when the original Hutchinson family made their announcement to the public of their purpose to inaugurate something entirely unique in the amusement line, the public has been interested in the life and aims of the Hutchinsons. For nearly a half a century those distinguished singers delighted their audiences by their simple ballads, their perfect harmony and uplifting sentiments sung as they alone where able to sing. After a silence of ten years the young element of Hutchinsons—Oliver Dennett Hutchinson, Nelly Hutchinson, Jesse Hutchinson and Bessie Hutchinson, desendants of Asa Hutchinson, "Tribe of Asa"—are pleased to announce their winter tour, after a successful autumn engagement just finished creating the old-time enthusiasm, thus attesting the popularity of their famous and peculiar sing, and a demand for a revival of Hutchinsonian style of inimitable harmony, delightful melody, perfect and distinct enunciation as rendered only by them. The reception accorded the Hutchinson Family Young Folks has been most gratifying and flattering, which proves the deep hold upon the public the singers enjoy, the audience invariably insisting upon encores, after listening to "I Come, I Come, Ye Called Me Long," "Hannah's at the Window Binding Shoes," "Good Old Days of Yore," "Stranger at the Sill," "Calomel," "Old Granite State," and late pleasing melodies and popular airs of the day. The Young Folks are especially fortunate in securing the talented juvenile violiniste, Miss Louise Taylor, who after a competitive test in Minnesota, was alone selected to compete at the World's Fair for the first prize which was awarded her, the result of repeated contests before a jury of world's experts. Encouraged by the appreciation of a generous though critical public, The Young Folks' strengthened and augmented by such talent as is represented by Louise Taylor, Violiniste; Sara L. Towne, Soprano; Jane M. Moore, Contralto, and E. W. Farr, Tenor, feel that they can in a still greater measure merit the patronage of the lovers of simple ballad singing, clear enunciation and perfect harmony, which are the distinguishing features of a Hutchinson Family Concert.

A SPECIAL MESSAGE.

PRESIDENT TOUCHES UP CONGRESS ON FINANCIAL MATTERS.

The Continued Drain on the Treasury Gold Ought to Be Stopped at Once—He Would Issue Fifty-Year Bonds and Retire Legal Tender and Treasury Notes.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 28.—The president has sent to congress a special message on the financial question. Aside from some minor recommendations as to details, it is as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:—In my last annual message I commended to the serious consideration of congress the condition of our national finances, and in connection with the subject indorsed the plan of currency legislation which at that time seemed to furnish protection against impending danger. This plan has not been approved by the congress. In the meantime the situation has so changed and the emergency now appears so threatening, that I deem it my duty to ask at the hands of the legislative branch of the government such as will restore confidence in our financial soundness and avert business disaster and universal distress among our people.

There Is Lack of Confidence.

The real trouble which confronts us consists in a lack of confidence widespread and constantly increasing in the continuing ability or disposition of the government to pay its obligations in gold. This lack of confidence grows to some extent out of the palpable and apparent embarrassment attending the efforts of the government under existing laws to procure gold, and to a greater extent out of the impossibility of either keeping it in the treasury or canceling obligations by its expenditure after it is obtained. The only way left open to the government for procuring gold is by the issue and sale of bonds. The only bonds that can be so issued were authorized nearly 25 years ago, and are not well calculated to meet our present needs.

Among other disadvantages they are made payable in coin, instead of specifically in gold, which in existing conditions detracts largely and in an increasing ratio from their desirability as investments. It is by no means certain that bonds of this description can much longer be disposed of at a price creditable to the financial character of our government. The most of the situation, however, remains to be mentioned. It is found in the means by which the treasury is despoiled of the gold thus obtained without cancelling a single government obligation, and solely for the benefit of those who find profit in shipping it abroad, or whose fears induce them to hoard it at home. We have outstanding about $500,000,000 of currency notes of the government for which gold may be demanded; and curiously enough, the law requires that when presented and in fact redeemed and paid in gold, they shall be reissued. Thus the same notes may do duty many times in drawing gold from the treasury; nor can the process be arrested as long as private parties who profit or otherwise see an advantage in repeating the operation. More than $300,000,000 in these notes have already been redeemed in gold, and notwithstanding such redemption, they are still outstanding.

Not a Question of Revenue.

It will hardly do to say that a simple increase of revenue will cure our troubles. The apprehension now existing and constantly increasing as to our financial ability does not rest upon a calculation of our revenue. The time has passed when the eyes of investors abroad and our people at home were fixed upon the revenues of the government. Changed conditions have attracted their attention to the gold of the government. There need be no fear that we cannot pay our current expenses, with such money as we have. There is now in the treasury a comfortable surplus of more than $63,000,000, but it is not in gold, and therefore does not meet our difficulty. I cannot see that differences of opinion concerning the extent to which silver ought to be coined or used in our currency should interfere with the councils of those whose duty it is to rectify evils now apparent in our financial situation.

Some of Our Obligations.

Besides the treasury notes, which certainly should be paid in gold, amounting to nearly $500,000,000, there will fall due in 1904 $100,000,000 of bonds issued during the last year for which we have received gold, and in 1907 nearly $600,000,000 of 4 per cent bonds issued in 1877. Shall the payment of these obligations in gold be repudiated? If they are to be paid in such a manner as the preservation of our national honor and national solvency demands, we should not destroy or even imperil our ability to supply ourselves with gold for that purpose. While I am not unfriendly to silver, and while I desire to see it recognized to such an extent as is consistent with financial safety and the preservation of national honor and credit, I am not willing to see gold entirely banished from our currency and finances. To avert such a consequence, I believe thorough and radical remedial legislation should be promptly passed. I therefore beg the congress to give the subject immediate attention.

Cleveland's Recommendations.

In my opinion, the secretary of the treasury should be authorized to issue bonds of the government for the purpose of procuring and maintaining a sufficient gold reserve and a redemption and cancellation of the United States legal tender notes, and the treasury notes issued for the purchase of silver under the law of July 14th, 1890. We should be relieved from the humiliating process of issuing bonds to procure gold to be immediately and repeatedly drawn out on these obligations for purposes not related to the benefit of our government or people. The principal and interest of these bonds should be payable on their face in gold, because they should be sold only for gold or its representative, and because there would now probably be difficulty in favorably disposing of bonds not containing this stipulation.

Duties Payable in Gold.

As a constant means for the maintenance of a reasonable supply of gold in the treasury, our duties on imports should be paid in gold, allowing all other dues to the government to be paid in other form of money.

TO GIVE IT EFFECT.

Springer Introduces a Bill in Line With the President's Suggestions.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 29.—Chairman Springer of the banking and currency committee of the house has introduced a bill to carry into effect the recommendations of the president's message. He has notified his committee to meet in the morning and consider the bill.

New Yorkers Approve It.

NEW YORK, Jan. 29.—Bankers and financial men in this city apparently without exceptions have spoke in terms of approval of the president's message.

The Reserve Lower Than Ever.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 29.—The total withdrawals of gold during the day was $3,975,000, of which $3,690,000 was from the New York sub-treasury and $285,000 from Boston, leaving the gold reserve at the close of business $51,773,173, or $416,327 lower than ever before.

TO CORROBORATE BLIXT.

Another Witness in the Ging Murder Case Discovered.

MINNEAPOLIS, Jan. 26.—The excitement over the Hayward trial grows instead of diminishing, and as the jury box gradually fills up the public has plenty of rumors to be run to earth in connection with the murder case.

Friday there was a well defined rumor in circulation that a conductor on the Bryn Mawr car line had been under arrest for two days, charged with complicity in the murder. While such was not the case, inquiry developed a piece of news, for it was learned that one of the conductors on that line had been subpœnaed two days ago attend as a witness at the trial. His name could not be learned, but it is stated that he was running a car at the time of the murder, and that he could identify Claus Blixt as the man who had been a passenger on his car at about the time Blixt stated in his confession that he took a car after the murder and rode into the city. This called forth the rumor that the man had been arrested.

The Tenth Juror.

MINNEAPOLIS, Jan. 29.—The work of securing a jury in the Hayward case was resumed in court. The work started out most encouragingly, a tenth juror being almost immediately secured in the person of S. H. Dyer, of Excelsior. Mr. Dyer is the father of the well known boat builder of Minnetonka.

TAYLOR WAS NOT THERE.

Overton's Claim That He Was Ill Near Crawfordsville Not Substantiated.

CRAWFORDSVILLE, Ind., Jan. 28.—The sensational locating of Treasurer Taylor of South Dakota by John G. Overton ended in wind. Overton took Marshal Grimes clear to Rensselaer to get Taylor at the home of his brother-in-law, Tom Coy. Taylor was not there. On account of his supposed high intelligence and prominence, hundreds of people in and about Crawfordsville really believed Overton's claim. What induced him to believe as he did cannot be imagined, although some have been unkind enough to insinuate that he received spiritualistic advice.

SEVEN WERE KILLED.

Main Building of a Brewery Plant Wrecked by a Boiler Explosion.

MENDOTA, Ills., Jan. 26.—At 3 o'clock p. m. the main building of Henning's brewery in this city was wrecked by a boiler explosion, the concussion being so great that every building in the city was badly shaken. The building destroyed was five stories and filled with machinery. The force of the explosion completely demolished it, killing six men and badly injuring seven others.

THE RAILS SPREAD.

Unfortunate Accident on the Vandalia Road at Coatsville, Ind.

INDIANAPOLIS, Jan. 29.—A terrible wreck, causing loss of life and maimed limbs, occurred at Coatsville at 2 p. m. Vandalia train No. 2, due in this city at 2:35, was wrecked by the spreading of rails. Two persons were killed almost instantly, and about 40 were seriously injured. The train was rounding at full speed and was about 20 minutes late.

Died of His Injuries.

ST. LOUIS, Jan. 29.—A dispatch received here announces that John W. Norton of this city who was so severely injured in the Vandalia wreck, died of his injuries at 6:30 a. m.

Churchill Buried.

LONDON, Jan. 29.—The remains of the late Lord Randolph Churchill were conveyed from the Churchill residence on Grosvenor Square to the Paddington railroad station early in the morning, and placed on board a train bound for Woodstock, Oxfordshire, where they were buried in the afternoon in Bladen church.

Altgeld as a Labor Union President.

ST. LOUIS, Jan. 29.—The statement is made by one of the most prominent labor leaders in the United States that the position of president of the Universal Labor Union, which is now in process of organization, would be tendered to Gov. John P. Altgeld, of Illinois, within the next few weeks.

TO PREVENT A WAR

GRESHAM AGAIN ASSUMES THE ROLE OF PEACEMAKER.

He Advises Arbitration Between Guatemala and Mexico—The Latter Country Inclined to Accept, Though Preparations for War Continue With Considerable Activity.

CITY OF MEXICO, Jan. 26.—The United States has undertaken to play the part of peacemaker between Mexico and Guatemala to prevent war, if possible. A telegram has been received here from Secretary Gresham expressing the hope that Guatemala and Mexico will agree between themselves upon some method of settling the dispute over the boundary, but that if this should not be possible the United States trusted the two countries would agree to submit their differences to the arbitration of some friendly nation. This communication from a nation with which Mexico enjoys such intimate and friendly relations has caused a profound impression upon the government and undoubtedly accounts, in part at least, for the decision of the minister of foreign affairs to withhold for five or six days, at least, the ultimatum which it was to dispatch in much less time in answer to the note from Guatemala just received. It is said the president of the United States made sure his appeal would be received in a good spirit before sending it by first communicating in an unofficial manner with Minister Romero at Washington.

That the situation here has been regarded as critical is evidenced by the fact that in the Mexican arsenal at the citadel there are being manufactured from 40,000 to 50,000 Remington cartridges by orders from the war department. They are also engaged day and night upon other work, in order that all the artillery shall be completely ready at a moment's notice with full donation of all kinds of ammunition.

MEXICO OBJECTS.

The Difficulty With Guatemala Cannot Be Settled by Arbitration.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 29.—The United States has exhausted all proper means of preventing a hostile collision between Mexico and Guatemala and the two countries must settle their dispute without further restraint exercised by the United States. Secretary Gresham's telegram to the Mexican government representing the hope of the president that the matter might be settled by reference to some friendly nation, has met with a very flattering reply from the Mexican government, but in substance it holds that the difficulty with Guatemala is that, owing to the attitude of that country,

Will Not Admit of Arbitration.

The inference is that Guatemala must either promptly submit to Mexico's terms of a surrender of her claims to lands in dispute on the boundary or fight. In this state of the case nothing can be done by our government at present to avert a clash. In case of actual hostilities it is recognized here that there can be but one outcome in vew of the vast numerical superiority and equipment of the Mexican army, and if Guatemala should be joined by other Central American countries in opposition to Mexico, it is believed that the end would still be the same.

The Cabinet Met.

CITY OF MEXICO, Jan. 29.—The president and cabinet were in secret session all day and until a late hour in the evening and decline to divulge anything as to the nature of the conference. The only thing known positively is that nothing has yet been done officially as to the formulating of Mexico's answer to the last note from Guatemala.

Bound for Guatemala.

VALLEJO, Cal., Jan. 29.—The Bennington is at Mare Island under orders to sail. Stores are being placed on board and the coal cargo replenished. The vessel will undoubtedly go to Guatemala.

A GENERAL STRIKE.

The Matter Being Canvassed by the Brotherhood of Engineers.

OAKLAND, Cal., Jan. 29.—Chief Arthur of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, is on his way to the Pacific coast. Under his instructions, all the brotherhoods are being polled on all the roads in order to get a vote on the question of ordering a general strike. According to the rules of the brotherhood, a general strike cannot be ordered without a consenting vote from two-thirds of the members of the organization.

The local brotherhoods have held meetings nearly every night for several weeks in West Oakland, and have had a number of conferences with Superintendent Fillmore and other Southern Pacific officials. Delegations of engineers have been here from Arizona, Oregon and Nevada. Their sessions have all been executive, and the engineers have refused to divulge any of their plans.

The engineers on Wilder's divisions are in favor of striking, but are somewhat fearful lest their attitude toward the A. R. U. during the strike in July will react against them now.

So soon as Eugene Debs gets through with his legal trials in Chicago he will start for California, and has sent word to all the officers of the union to not antagonize the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers in the event of that organization going out on a general strike.

Presbyterian Chautauqua.

CHICAGO, Jan. 26.—Bass Lake, Ind., has been selected as the site of the new Presbyterian summer school and resort, fashioned after the Chautauqua. The school will be controlled by the Presbyterian church and will be conducted on liberal lines, and is expected to draw its support from other denominations.

STATE LEGISLATUR

TWENTY-NINTH BIENNIAL SESSIO

Tuesday, Jan. 22.

SENATE—The senate proceedings prio to voting on United States senator, wer rather tame. Several bills dealing wit matters of general public interest are known to be prepared and ready for presentation, but they are being withheld until the excitement relating to the electio shall have abated sufficiently to enable them to receive what their authors consider their proper share of notice and discussion.

The vote for United States senator in the senate was as follows:

Washburn	23	McCleary	1
Nelson	17	Pillsbury	1
Donnelly	5	Comstock	1
McHale	2	Mitchell, Wm.	1
Dickinson, D. A.	1	Total	5

HOUSE.—The morning session of the house was mainly taken up in acting upon the reports of the committee on legislative expenses and the introduction of bills.

At noon the house balloted for United States senator, the vote being as follows:

Washburn	32	Donnelly	5
Nelson	45	McHale	6
Comstock	11	Tawney	1
McCleary	7	Buckham	1

Wednesday, Jan. 23.

SENATE—The senate passed a bill to appropriate $60,000 to cover the deficiency in the expenses of the state university. Some important bills were introduced, among them one by Senator Stevens to create a board of arbitration to settle labor disputes. A bill by Senator Barr of Mankato is directed at medical quacks. A bill by Theden makes property of husband and wife equally liable for wages of servant girls, with no exemption.

HOUSE.—The session of the house was brief, and little business was done beyond the introduction of a number of bills.

At noon both house met in joint session and elected Governor Nelson as United States senator to succeed Washburn. The vote was as follows:

Nelson	102	Donnelly	1
Washburn	36	Mitchell	4
McCleary	9	Lind	1
Total vote cast on joint ballot			16

Thursday, Jan. 24.

SENATE.—Several new bills were read in the senate and one house bill was given its first reading. The three more important measures introduced were:

A bill to exterminate the Russian thistle and appropriating $200,000 to accomplish that end; one creating the office of a state mine inspector and deputies, to insure that the lives of the miners would not be sacrificed by needlessly dangerous machinery and careless mine engineering; a bill intended to prevent evasion of the law prohibiting the sale of liquor to minors.

HOUSE—The feature of the house session was the war of words over the passage of the senate bill appropriating $60,000 to cover a deficiency in the university current expenses appropriation. The bill had passed the senate and Mr. Robbins asked the suspension of rules for its passage. Objection was made, and the bill finally went to the appropriation committee. The appropriations committee met after the session and decided to report the bill for immediate passage.

The judiciary committee reported recommending the passage of several bills, among them, H. F. No. 16, relating to bounties on wolves; H. F. No. 18, aiming firearms at persons; H. F. No. 31, to prevent corrupt practices at elections; H. F. No. 20, appropriating money for drainage in the Red River valley.

Friday, Jan. 25.

SENATE.—Toward the close of the session of the senate Lieutenant Governor Clough created a stir by announcing that it would be necessary for the senate to elect a president pro tem at once.

This was a straight tip that before many days the lieutenant governor would be governor, and Knute Nelson free to assume his duties in the senate at Washington on March 4. Upon a vote being taken 36 voted for Senator Frank A. Day of Martin, and 12 for Senator Barr of Blue Earth. Mr. Day's election was then made unanimous.

A few bills were introduced, among them one for a commission to locate and purchase a site for a new insane hospital, and one to reduce liquor licenses in cities to $500.

The senate adjourned to Monday.

HOUSE—Mr. Staples introduced a series of joint resolutions directly aimed at the taking of timber from mineral lands under mineral leases and contracts, and they were unanimously passed under suspension of rules.

The appropriation committee reported back the $60,000 deficiency for the university and it was passed without dissent.

Saturday, Jan. 26.

HOUSE.—Six bills were introduced in the house, two of them important ones. One provides for a constitutional amendment relating to the taxation of the product of mines and other property owned by mining companies. The other relates to child labor and was prepared by the state labor commissioner. The judiciary committee reported on several bills. An adverse report was made on Douglas' bill to prevent "ringing" of horses.

Favorable reports were made on the anti-cigarette and tobacco bill and one or two others of local importance.

SENATE.—Not in session.

Monday, Jan. 28.

SENATE—The first executive session of the senate was held during the evening, the matter under consideration being the confirmation of appointments by Governor Nelson. The consideration of appointments was laid over three days. The official list was not given out, but it is said that most of them are reappointments.

HOUSE—The appellate court bill, introduced by Dr. Zier of Hennepin, is undoubtedly one of the most important of the session. The supreme court has been, and now is, so crowded with work that its relief has been a matter of necessity. So many cases demand its attention that it ordinarily requires more than a year to get a decision from it, and the judges are now more than 200 cases behind the docket.

The appellate court established by the bill consists of one chief justice and two associates, to hold office for terms of six years each and to be elected at the next general election, the terms of the court to be held on the first Tuesday in April, September and December. Jurisdiction is given in all cases where heretofore appeals have been allowed to the supreme court from the municipal and district courts, except in certain cases.

Dr. Rohilliard introduced his bill to prevent drunkenness. It provides that, after three convictions the subject is to be sent to Roche [illegible] asylum and be given the Keely cure [illegible]

The house adopted the senate anti-pooling reso[illegible] congress.

THE WORK OF CONGRES

Tuesday, Jan. 22.

The Hawaiian policy and the Nicaraguan canal bill occupied the entire time of the senate. There were several acrimonious speeches.

The Indian appropriation bill passed the house, having been under consideration five days.

Wednesday, Jan. 23.

The sundry civil bill was discussed in the house.

Senator Jones and Senator Smith each introduced a financial measure in the senate and each made a speech on the subject. The Nicaragua canal bill was then taken up for discussion. Mr. Turpee resumed his speech.

Thursday, Jan. 24.

The senate continued debate on the Nicaragua canal bill.

The house made excellent progress on the sundry civil appropriation bill, most of the estimates being passed without debate.

Friday, Jan. 25.

The senate passed the Nicaragua canal bill by a vote of 31 to 21.

The sundry civil bill passed in the shortest time, so far as known, on record. It was under consideration but three days. As passed the bill carries $38,125,721. Two propositions offered respectively by Mr. Sayers and Mr. Coombs, the former's to clothe the secretary of the treasury with power to issue United States bonds of such denominations as he should see fit, instead of as now to reissue them of the same denomination, and the latter's, to retire and cancel the gold certificates and make them non-receivable for customs dues after July 1 next, furnished the principal theme of discussion. Mr. Sayers' proposition was defeated, 74 to 87, while that of Mr. Coombs was carried without division.

Saturday, Jan. 26.

The Vest substitute on the Hawaiian question, indorsing the course of the administration, and advising non-interference was adopted in the senate, 24 to 22.

The house took up the sugar differential repeal bill for consideration. Mr. Wilson opened the debate.

Monday, Jan. 28.

In the house, after the reading of the president's message, debate was continued on the sugar differential repeal bill.

The reading of President Cleveland's message on the financial situation formed the most interesting feature of the day's session in the senate. Most of the day was taken up by the house bill disapproving an agreement with the Southern Ute Indians, providing for their removal from Colorado to Utah, allowing lands in severalty to those desiring them, and removing others from a portion of the present reservation and confining them to the western part of it, and to several townships in New Mexico. The bill was passed.

THE POPE'S ENCYCLICAL.

It Treats of a Number of Subjects of Interest.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 29.—The pope's encyclical was made public during the day.

With regard to the apostolic delegation the pope states that it was instituted with a view to drawing closer together the bonds between the Catholics of America and the holy see without in any way curtailing the powers of the bishop.

His holiness urges the American episcopate to put an end to strife, to instill the idea of unity and the perpetuity of marriage among the faithful and to inculcate among the people civil and religious virtues.

In particular the pope calls upon the bishops to turn aside workmen's associations from law breaking, to teach journalists respect for religion and truth, to reprove those journals which pass the judgment upon episcopate acts, and finally to turn Protestants to Catholocism by charity, by instruction in doctrine and by leading exemplary lives.

My Wife is Nervous
Says many a man and too often he is inclined to blame the poor, tired woman who cannot eat or sleep, whose whole life is filled with misery because her blood has become impoverished and her nervous system exhausted. She needs a building up medicine like Hood's Sarsaparilla. A few bottles will enrich and vitalize her blood, tone and strengthen her digestive organs, give her a good appetite, enable her to sleep soundly, banish her nervousness and bring back her smiles. Mr. J. W. Roberson, of Greenfield, Tenn., says: "My wife began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla about three months ago and she is now taking her third bottle. She has been in poor health for fifteen years. Hood's Sarsaparilla is doing her more good than any other medicine she has ever taken. Her appetite is better, she looks better and there has been improvement in every way."

CHAPTER I.

OPENING OF A CAMPAIGN.

The Army of the Cumberland is wakening. For months its 30 miles of rpid length have been marked by usters of white tents like the rings of gigantic anaconda. But now there is a arousing from its long period of thargy. The tents are being struck, e men are stuffing knapsacks, rolling lankets or swallowing from tin cups a t draft of invigorating coffee. Wagons re being loaded with all kinds of camp quipage — tents, camp cots, cooking tensils, the pine tables and army desks f the staff departments. [illegible]re orderlies re holding horses, waiting their riders, nd there men are strapping blankets or onchos behind saddles or cramming acon and "hard tack" into haversacks, hile strikers empty the contents of the emijohn into canteens. Each regiment s soon as formed moves out into the oad, the whole taking up the line of arch by brigades and divisions.

It is the right or head of the monster hat awakens first. The main body of his wing moves diagonally toward the ront and left, while cavalry pushes directly south to conceal the movement nd produce a false impression on the enemy. All day the infantry and artillery work their way over dirt roads, the men marching at will, smoking, chatting, oughing, the Irish regiments cracking okes, the Germans singing, all with that sprit which pervades an army just starting after a long period of idleness on new campaign. A lashing of artillery orses, a cursing of mules, words of ommand, bugle calls, picket firing, the ccasional boom of a gun, mingle confusedly and in a country used only to he peaceful lowing of cattle or the ong of birds. Throughout its whole ength the Army of the Cumberland is n motion, advancing on that campaign which is to maneuver the Confederates ut of Tennessee and lead up to the battle of Chickamauga.

On a road running parallel with the Cumberland mountains, which flank the Union army on its left, a strange looking vehicle is going at a breakneck pace toward the south. The horse is a rawboned animal with long legs and neck, while the vehicle—a buggy—is so bespattered with mud that what paint remains on it is invisible. The bottom is partly gone; the dashboard would let through a cannon ball without being injured; the springs are badly bent; the top, which is let down—there are no props to hold it up—is shriveled and torn, its tatters flying behind in the wind. A woman in a striped calico dress, a sunbonnet of the same material, a pair of colored spectacles on her nose, holds the reins and urges forward the horse. Yet strange looking as is the conveyance and its occupant, for that time and region there is nothing unusual in the appearance of either. The country people inhabiting that portion of Tennessee are not cultured, and uncouthness is rather the rule than the exception.

Coming to a place where she can get a full view for some distance ahead, the woman glances over the intervening space between her and the next rise in the undulating ground. Seeing nothing to deter, she drives her horse on as rapidly as she can force him to go. Her buggy careens till it is in danger of going over; she is bounced from her seat with a prospect of being sent over the dashboard; the mud flies, the horse wheezes, the buggy groans, but there is no slackening of pace.

"Go on, Bobby, go on!"

Turning a curve in the road partly hidden by trees, she sees a cavalry camp ahead. In the road an officer stands talking to a man in a farm wagon, beside whom, on a board seat, its two ends resting on the wagon's sides, sits a boy of 14, while on a back seat, evidently borrowed from a more pretentious vehicle, is a young girl, perhaps three or four years the boy's senior.

The woman of the striped dress drove up to the group, and drawing rein listened to what they were saying.

"Cap," said the farmer—all officers in the Union army were called by the people of the country either cap or gineral or mister—"cap, I want ter go through the lines powerful bad."

"Well, Oi'm thinkin, me good man," replied the officer, with the brogue of an Irishman, "that's exactly what old Rosy wants to do unless he prefers to get behind 'em and bag 'em from the rear."

"Oh, I don't mean fightin! I wants ter go hum peaceful."

"Can't pass ye, me good man. Oi've orders not to pass any one south while the army is movin. There's no need to be tellin ye that all day. Once ought to be sufficient."

"What's thet?" cried a shrill voice from the buggy. "You don't mean fo' ter tell me I can't go hum?"

"Oi fear, me dear leddy, that ye can't, if ye live beyond our lines."

"H'm! And so you uns hev kem down hyar ter make war on women."

"Well, now, that depends on the kind of war. We've come down vi et armis, as my old preceptor at the university used to say—God bless 'im! Like enough the vi is for the men and the armis for the women."

"I don't keer," replied the woman. "You uns hain't got no business fo' ter come down hyar nohow. You're a mis'able set o' black abolishioners. I'm a gal 'thout nothin ter fight with, and you uns"—

"Beauty and the beast," interrupted the officer, bowing.

"Now, see hyar, Mr. Yank, I got ter go hum. Pop he's away, and mother she's sick in bed."

The officer scratched his head and thought.

"Well, me friends," he said presently, "Oi'm thinkin Oi'll refer the case of all of yez to brigade headquarters. Would ye moind sittin where ye are till I get an answer?"

"Reckon not," from the farmer.

"Hurry up," said the woman in the buggy. "Mother's waitin fo' me."

The officer stepped into his tent near by and came out with a pencil and the back of an old letter. With these he proceeded to take down the information required. Approaching the buggy, he said:

"Will ye plaze favor me with your patronymic"—he paused while he looked to see if she were young or old—"miss?"

"My what?"

"Your patronymic."

"Oh, talk Tennessee!"

"Well, then, your cognomen."

"See hyar, Mr. Officer, ef you want ter git anything outen me, you want to talk squer'."

"Please tell me your name."

"Betsy Baggs. And yours?"

"Major Burke, at your service. Are ye Union or"—

"Rebel!"

"Where do ye want to go?"

"Hum."

"And that is at"—

"Dunlap."

"Why are ye here?"

"I been ter MacMinnville ter see mother's old doctor."

"There's a shorter road from MacMinnville than this. Why didn't ye take it?"

The girl showed a slight confusion.

"Oh, I got a friend at Franklin college. She uns and I uns allus ben powerful thick."

After getting the data as to all the party the major called a mounted man and directed him to take it to headquarters and ask for instructions.

"Do ye know who to take it to?" he asked of the man as he was about to ride away.

"It's to the gineral I'm takin it."

"The gineral? Man, would you get me court martialed for disregard of the regulations? Take it to the chafe of staff, ye lunkhead, and from him ye'll get the answer. It's not the loikes of you can approach the gineral. Moind now, and don't spind the time talkin with the guard."

While the messenger was away the party listened to the voluble tongue of the young Confederate sympathizer in the buggy. She entered into the causes of the war, depicted the benefits of negro slavery, especially on the slave, spoke admiringly of all Confederate soldiers and ransacked the dictionary to find words to express her loathing of Yankees.

"Come, now, Miss Baggs," said the major good naturedly. "There's a young fellow in me regiment who'll suit ye exactly. He is an Oirishman from the crown of his head to the sole of his fut. He only came over a few years ago. He is as smart as a whip. There was but one gurrel in County Cavan who could outtalk 'im. That's the reason he left Oireland."

"When I want a man, I reckon I can find one right hyar outen the yarth o' Tennessee 'thout goin to Oireland ter find one. Is he redheaded?"

"Red as the linin of an artillery officer's cap."

"What kind o' eyes?"

"Blue as a robin's egg."

"Waal, trot him out. I'll take a look at him."

"Oi'll call him meself," and the major went into one of the tents. There he found Corporal Ratigan, the man he sought.

"Corporal Rats," he said—every one called the corporal Rats—"there's a gurrel out there that wants to go through the lines. Oi've sent to brigade headquarters to find out if they'll give her a pass. I want ye to make her acquaintance."

"At your service, major," said the corporal, saluting. And the two walked out to where the travelers were waiting.

"Miss Baggs," said the major, "allow me to presint Corporal Ratigan, commonly called Rats by his comrades, one of the most gallant men in the regiment."

Corporal Ratigan bowed and uncovered a head of hair fully up to the major's description of it. It surmounted one of the most honest of countenances. There was an air of gentility about the man despite his private's uniform, and the smile with which he greeted the young woman could not have been more bewitching had he saluted a marchioness. Admiration for the strapping Irish Yankee soldier stood big in Miss Baggs' eyes.

"How de?" she said, with something that was intended for a bow. "Yer a purty likely lookin feller of you air play-in Yank. You'd better 'a' staid in Oireland than come down hyar ter make war on women."

"And have Oi overpainted the beautiful tint of his hair?" asked the major, laughing. "It'd make good winter hair; needn't hev no fire in the house."

Horses' hoofs were heard down the road, and in a few minutes the messenger who had been sent to headquarters rode up.

"Where's the answer?" asked the major.

"Divil an answer did Oi get, major," said the man, saluting awkwardly.

"And what d'ye mean by that?"

"Well, Oi kem up to headquarthers, and the gineral was gettin off of his harse to go in his tint. 'Have ye anythin for me, me man?' he asked. 'Niver a worrud, gineral,' Oi answered, salutin respectful. 'What's the paper ye have in your belt?' 'It's for the chafe of staff.' 'Well, give it to me.' 'Divil a bit, gineral; it's not for the loikes of me to be givin yes a paper. Oi'm instructed to give it to the chafe of staff.' 'Give me the paper, ye cussed Oirishman,' he said, 'or Oi'll sind ye to the guard tint.' 'Niver will Oi be guilty of breakin the regulations or the articles of war, gineral.' 'Corporal of the guard!' yelled the gineral.

"The corporal kem and saluted the gineral, him red as Corporal Ratigan's head. 'Take that paper from thet man!' he roered. Well, bein surrounded by the guard who were at the corporal's call, Oi surrendered."

"And thin?" gasped the major, glaring at the stupid messenger.

"And thin the gineral said, 'Go to yar camp and tell Major Burke to put ye in the guard tint for 24 hours. And whin he sinds another orderly to me not to sind a recruit, or Oi'll put him in arrest.'"

"By the howly ——! Ye infernal, raw ——! Did ye get no answer?"

"'Oi'll sind an answer by a soldier who has been properly retained,' said the gineral. Didn't ye tell me right, major?"

"Corporal of the guard!" cried the major by way of reply.

"Take that man," he said when the corporal came, "to the guard tent."

As the messenger was marched away, protesting against the injustice of his treatment for obeying orders, a staff officer rode up. Taking the major apart, he instructed him to let the applicants go through, provided they would take an oath not to give any information concerning the Union troops to the enemy. With the passes he brought a suggestion from the general to send some person with one or the other of the two parties under pretense of an escort, but really with a view to discovering the proximity of the enemy. Now that the main army was moving, it might be well to discover if the cavalry on its flank had fallen back. The ground was unfavorable for a reconnoissance; hence the suggestion to get information by strategem.

The major hunted the camp for a Bible on which to administer the oath and called on Corporal Ratigan to help him. He explained the general's request and told Ratigan that he wanted him to go with Miss Baggs. Having given the corporal a full understanding of what was required of him, he went back to the party with a Bible, followed by Ratigan.

The farmer and his family were first sworn, and then the major offered to swear Miss Baggs.

"I hain't goin ter do no swearin," she said defiantly.

"Oi'm glad to hear that," remarked Corporal Ratigan.

"What fo', firo top?" she asked, surprised.

"Oi'd be breakin me heart at partin with ye."

"You hain't got no heart nohow, or you wouldn't be in the Yankee army."

"Don't ye believe it," exclaimed the major; "his heart's as warrum as the color of his hair. Come, young leddy, take the oath. Oi'd be sorry to be partin ye from yer mother and she sufferin."

"I won't."

"Won't ye take it for moi sake?" queried Ratigan, with a mock appeal.

"You'll hev ter git some un uglier'n you uns ter move me. I hanker after ugly men, but you uns ain't quite ugly enough fo' me."

"Now ye're talkin with a seductive tongue," quoth Ratigan. "If the major will permit, Oi've a mind to see ye through the lines meself without the oath."

The corporal looked slyly at the major, and the major returned the corporal's sly glance.

"Very well," said Burke. "Ye go with har, and moind that she isn't keepin har ois open to see things for Gineral Bragg's benefit. Miss Baggs, if ye'll just keep lookin roit into the corporal's blue orbs, ye'll get through all right, and if ye're tempted to look aside just fix 'em on his head, and ye'll be blinded."

The corporal went for his horse, buckled on his revolver, and coming back started out to play diplomat—in other words, to acquire knowledge by strategy.

CHAPTER II.

A WAR OF WITS.

Corporal Ratigan rode gallantly beside Miss Baggs, the two keeping up a constant picket firing, which occasionally warmed to the dignity of a skirmish. Miss Baggs was in an excellent humor and the corporal quite delighted at the role he was playing. He pretended to watch her carefully whenever anything belonging to the army was passed on the road, while he was secretly forming his plans for getting far enough on the [illegible] to determine the proximity of the enemy. He felt no suspicion as to Miss Baggs carrying information. Being on the flank of the army, she would not be likely to have much information to carry. The country people were constantly passing between the lines, and considering their harrowing excuses no one except with a heart of stone could well prevent them.

"What's in the box ye have with ye?" asked Ratigan, looking at a square little box on the seat beside her. It had been covered with a shawl, which had fallen from over it, exposing it to view.

"Thet? Thet's a philosophy machine. You see, my friend, Sal Classick, she knows a heap o' things. She's tryin ter beat some on 'em inter my pore noddle. Reckon she won't hev no easy time."

"What branch does she teach ye with that?"

"Waal, you see, mother, she's sufferin with palsy, and this hyar box is a—waal, Sal, she calls it a gal—gal"—

"Galvanic battery?"

"Thet's it. You hit it right thar. A galvanic battery. We uns 're goin ter try 't on mother. Lord a-massy, what's thet?"

She directed his attention from the box to a cloud of smoke hanging over the gaps in the hills far to the west. They were crossing a mountain spur and could see it quite plainly.

"There's foightin goin on there," remarked the corporal.

"And you uns air gittin licked," observed the rebellious Miss Baggs.

"How d'ye know that?" asked Ratigan, surprised that she should know anything about it.

"Oh, I reckon!"

"It's a quare thing—the reckonin of gurrels."

"Waal, you see, women hain't got the big heeds men hev. They can't reason things out. They hev ter jump at 'em mobbe, like ants. Ants is powerful small, but they're most times right when they reckon."

Ratigan made no reply. He was thinking that Miss Baggs did not appear to be so plain a personage as he at first thought her. He looked at her hands, incased in coarse gloves, and noticed that they were small for "poor white trash."

Her attire was very cheap, and her cowhide shoes did not betoken refinement, but somehow he began to gather a notion that Miss Baggs was not so dreadfully common as she appeared. The corporal came of an excellent family in his native land, and under ordinary circumstances could detect refinement. He looked for Miss Baggs to use some expression beyond the ken of a "poor white" girl, but she did not. So he dismissed the matter from his mind and began to wonder what excuse he could make to go on with her under flag of truce when she should pass the Union pickets.

"We uns air goin slow enough ter worrit a snail," remarked Miss Baggs.

"And why should we be goin faster?"

"Wher'd you steal thet critter?" she asked, instead of replying, looking sidewise at the corporal's mount. "It's likely nuff fo' Tennessee blood."

"Oh! That's United States. Don't ye see the 'U. S.' branded on him?"

"Can he trot?"

"He can beat anything in the brigade."

"D'you think he can trot with this hyar critter o' mine."

Ratigan looked at her rawboned brute and burst into a laugh.

"Waal, now, you needn't take on so. Reckon I c'd give you a brush ef you was minded."

"All right, me dear. Here's a straight bit of road."

"Fo' what stakes?"

"A $5 greenback."

"Agin Confederate money?"

"With pleasure."

The corporal drew forth a crisp $5 bill. And Miss Baggs put the thumb and finger of one hand in the palm of the other under her glove and drew out a Confederate shinplaster.

"Who holds the stakes?" asked the corporal gleefully.

"You uns."

"Divil a bit. The lady shall hold 'em."

She took the bill he handed her and gave the lines a jerk with a "Git along ther! Remember, it's a trottin race."

Ratigan was at a disadvantage from the first. He did not dare to use his spurs lest his horse should break from a trot. Miss Baggs' animal began to reach his lank legs out, triangulating in a lumbering fashion that put him over the ground at no inconsiderable speed. The corporal did his best and kept pace pretty well.

"Reckon my Bob Lee kin knock the stuffin outen your critter, Mr. Sojer. Git up, Bob."

With that Bob increased the length of his triangulations, increasing their frequency at the same time. The result was that he carried the old buggy with Betsy Baggs in it right away from the corporal. Indeed Ratigan fell behind steadily. If he should break from a trot, he would lose the race; if he should keep up his trot, he would lose Miss Baggs.

Suddenly an officer appeared on the road, and regarding him sternly ordered him to halt.

"Oi'm followin the young lady, sir. Oi'm on official business for the gineral."

THE Duluth Evening Herald, that calls itself a republican paper is preparing to bolt the republican ticket again. That's a trick it has a habit of doing when it can't rule the roost and yet it has the sublime audacity to call itself a true blue republican paper!

THE president has recommended congress to provide for the issue of more bonds to run 50 years at 3 per cent per annum, payable in gold and, Springer has introduced a bill to that effect. Grover says he don't see any good reason why future generations should not do a little sweating over the financial problem.

MR. F. FAYRAM, of Detroit, Mich., has become the business manager of the St. Paul Daily Call, and Mr. Hall will have full editorial control. Mr. Hall has had wonderful success so far and together they will make a full team, as Mr. Fayram is a newspaper man of ripe experience. Here's success to the Call.

ONE of Crookston's former fellow townsmen, A. N. Hopkins, has been nominated for comptroller of the city of Duluth, on the Republican ticket and the Duluth News-Tribune says he is sure to be elected. Mr. Hopkins was for a term deputy sheriff of Polk county, since when he has been on the state weighing force at Duluth. His many friends here will unite with the JOURNAL in the wish for his triumphant election.

THE bill now before the legislature prohibiting the sale of liquors to children is a wise measure and should pass. It has become a chronic habit among certain classes in the large cities for parents to send their children to saloons for liquor. This is carried to such an extent as to render the law against selling liquor to minors almost a dead letter so far as the observance is concerned. The object of the bill referred to is to prevent the sale of liquor to a child or a minor whether they have an order from the parent or not.

THE Minneapolis Evening Journal has dug up a deeply laid scheme by which Wm. R. Merriam is to be put into the United States Senate four years hence to succeed Cushman K. Davis—and Knute Nelson is to be made the cats-paw to accomplish this result, and says that W. R. Merriam in 1890 went up to Alexandria and informed Mr. Nelson it he (Nelson) would wash a lot of dirty linen that he, (Merriam) would make him United States Senator to succeed Washburn. One great fault in that theory and beautiful fairy story that seems to have escaped the Journal's notice entirely, is the fact that Nelson did not need the help of Merriam or any other rich man to make him Senator or anything else he desired, because Nelson is a man of the people and is in close touch with the great masses which he represents. It is well known when he decided to leave Congress he could have stayed there had he chosen, or he could have gone into the Senate had he chosen. It will be noticed that the difference between Mr. Nelson's entry into official position and that of Mr. Merriam and Mr. Washburn has been that Mr. Nelson has been called every time. It may be that ex-governor Merriam hopes to inherit some of Gov. Nelson's strength but that Nelson needs any of Merriam's strengt is too funny for serious consideration.

"What's the matter with Dave Clough?"

"He's all right," and he was "all right" with the Minneapolis papers when supporting W. D. Washburn six years ago. Then he was a "republican wheelhorse" a "tower of strength" and he was all right as their candidate for Lieut-Gov. two years ago even though as such he might possibly become governor through the death of the governor—but now, when he dares to oppose Mr. Washburn's re-election he is suddenly very unfit for governor! Well, we like consistency but that suits us too well.

Pioneer Press:—Both Congressman McCleary and Mr. Comstock played a manly and dignified part in the contest for the senatorship. They both entered it upon the theory that it might develop into a deadlock between the two leading candidates. Their role was to wait and see. If the contingency, which it was not unreasonable to expect, had occurred, either of them might reasonably hope by keeping on friendly terms with all, to succeed to the support which t had been found useless to waste on the leading adversaries. Their theory was right enough. But matters did not turn out that way. But if it had happened that either of them had been elected the people of Minnesota would have had every reason to be gratified at the result.

SENATOR NELSON—GOV. CLOUGH.

St. Paul Dispatch.

After a contest which will be memorable in the annals of Minnesota it has been decided that the Hon. Knut Nelson will represent this state as United States senator for the next six years.

The result is one which the supporters of all candidates can heartily concur in. It was brought about by able, conscientious and devoted labor on the part of those who believe that the character, attainments and eminence in public life of Gov. Nelson merit that the additional honor should be done him. It is a result, moreover, in which the people will heartly concur. They recognize in the governor a man sprung from the masses, who has proven by the severest test known his patriotism and his distinguished fitness for public station.

As between two men so eminent in public and professional life as Senator Washburn and Gov. Nelson, the resulting contest was one wholly worthy of the constestants. Either one of them would honor the state at Washington, and the choice made between them will lose little to the state. Better by far that Senator Washburn should go down before so able and popular a representative of the people than the senatorial crown should have been snatched from him by a mediocre man, or that an outsider should have come in and carried off the honor so splendidly contested for by the four leading candidates.

While expressing our admiration and reverence of W. D. Washburn, we congratulate the people on the result not only in the senatoral contest, but in the accompanying fact of the selection of Lieut. Gov. Clough as the chief executive of the state for the next two years.

Warren Register:—A committee of Masons from the Crookston lodge came to Warren yesterday morning for the purpose of removing Casper Sands to the hospital at Crookston. Mr. Sands has suffered for many months from rheumatism, and was unable to receive at his home on Lower Snake the attentions he constantly required. The malady was fast sapping his life away, and his fellow members of the Crookston lodge believed that a removal to some place where he could receive constant and competant attention was the only means of saving his life. Mr. Sands was brought in to Warren in the afternoon and taken to Crookston on the evening train.

Warren Sheaf—Rev. L. W. Squier, of Crookston, gave two very interesting lectures at the M. E. church on Thursday and Friday evenings last week, each lecture being illustrated by numerous fine stereopticon views. The subject for the first lecture was China, and he gave a very vivid description of some of the principal cities, and other objects of interest in the Flowery Kingdom and of the customs and habits of the people. The manner of preparing tea for market was illustrated and described, and some have since added tea to the list of articles they swore off using on New Year's day. The military weakness of China was explained, and it is no wonder she finds herself unable to cope with the plucky and progressive little Japs. The subject for the next lecture was Japan. That country is a progressive nation and it is making use of the modern discoveries of the western world in science and in art, while the civilization of China is practically the same as it was thousands of years ago. Such lectures have a great educational value, and impress the subject upon the mind much clearer and better than the ordinary taxt book. Those who were so fortunate as to hear these lectures have a better and more correct knowledge of the two countries than they could have obtained from long study.

The Stork's Devotion.

The stork has given numerous proofs of her maternal affections. She prepares her nest with care, lines it with down, deposits her eggs, hatches them tenderly and never for a moment leaves her cherished progeniture. When the little ones emerge from their shells, other labors begin. The father undertakes to provide their food. The mother takes charge of their education. First they have to be taught to fly, which is no trifing affair. When in attempting to walk our own children fall, there is no great harm, but the little storks have to try their wings by leaving their nests and venturing into space. Therefore how timid are the young ones and how anxious their mother! And yet the first lesson passes off without accident, and soon you will see the young generation gayly fluttering around their airy home.

But these motherly instincts are common traits. The stork carries her devotion much further. She loves her children enough to give up her life for them, of which here is a memorable example: At Delft a house is on fire. The flames have reached the roof. A young brood of storks have just come to light. They are still nude and unable to fly. The mother understands the peril. She moves about, flaps her wings and makes a desperate chatter to attract assistance, and when at last her nest catches fire she resolutely settles down into it and perishes with her children. It is only just that in return for such devotion the young ones should love their parents. Therefore, when old age has come, when the old storks, crippled with rheumatism, can no longer venture far out in search of food, the children provide it for him.—French of Maurice Englehart.

The Mission of the Newspaper.

The clergymen of the period have had much to say, first and last, about the mission of the public newspaper. None, however, has better set forth its work than the reverend gentleman who was the orator at the Attleboro celebration. Said Mr. Wales, with perfect truth:

"It is the mission of the newspaper to publish news. Now, it is a fact that, from the man who waters his milk to the cold blooded murderers, all degrees of criminal mankind want news suppressed. Liars, thieves, scandal mongers, deceivers, burglars, fighters, adulterers, gamblers, drunkards and gentlemen rascals all cry out against the news publishers. Their business is disturbed by the enterprise of newspapers. But no one who is open and honest and free from any taint of transgression wants news suppressed."

It would be a blessed thing for more than one congregation if those clerics who are accustomed to carp at modern journalism, in season and out of season, would put themselves in possession of Mr. Wales' remarks on the province of the newspaper and read, mark, learn and inwardly digest them.—Boston Globe.

YOUNG WOMAN, BEWARE.

Be Sure You Can Support a Man Before Marrying Him.

Breach of promise suits brought by men against women are becoming common. Evidently the emancipated woman is not doing her duty by her weaker and less capable brother. She wins his affections and then casts him off on a cold world without any visible means of support. It is not uncommon for women to be rich in their own right nowadays. Many women earn fine incomes. These self supporting women have not yet developed, along with other things masculine, the old, fine, manly sense of responsibility toward the loving and dependent. Will woman be in all respects the equal of man until she learns this lesson?

In the good time coming a young woman will consider it dishonorable to enter into a matrimonial engagement with a young man whom she has not the ability to support. Some of the half emancipated girls are so thoughtless. They lure a youth on to propose, well knowing that their salaries are barely sufficient to gratify their own feminine fancies. Or even heiresses will wed a poor young man, only to grow tired of him presently, when his charms begin to fade. Then he is divorced and forced to return to the ribbon counter and work for a living.

They manage those things better on the continent. There the custom allows a poor but honest prince to compel the American millionairess to settle a suitable marriage portion on him before he consents to accept her hand. Our own men can make a similar custom here if they will be equally firm. They owe it to themselves to do so. Young love is very beautiful, no doubt, but no true woman will think of marrying until she is able to support a husband.—Buffalo Express.

THE HONDURAS FAIR.

CENTRAL AMERICAN REPUBLICS PREPARING AN EXPOSITION FOR 1896.

The Scene Will Be the Beautiful Villa Nueva, "the Garden Spot of the World," In the Republic of Honduras—An American Director General.

Inspired by the example of the United States, Central America is awakening from her tropical lethargy and will hold a grand international fair in February, 1896. It will be called the Central American exposition, will be participated in by the governments of Honduras, Costa Rica, Nicaragua, Guatemala and San Salvador, and will be held in the beautiful valley of Villa Nueva, in Spanish Honduras, not far from where Christopher Columbus first set foot upon the soil of North America, explored the coast of Honduras and Costa Rica, suffered from famine, mutiny and other disasters and returned to Spain to die two years later in poverty and neglect. The site is said to be one of the most beautiful spots on earth, and it possesses the further advantages of being on the Honduras railroad, only 60 miles from Puerto Cortez, one of the principal ports of Honduras, on the Atlantic coast and on the banks of the navigable Ulua, about the same distance from the ocean.

One hundred and fifty acres of land will be devoted to the exhibition proper, and the buildings will be of iron, with an exterior of staff, like the structures at the World's fair. The facade of the main building will be a series of five pavilions representing the five republics engaged in the exposition enterprise. In front of the main building will be a grand plaza containing a triumphal arch surmounted by a statue of Francisco Morazan, a Honduras general who became president of the republic of Central America in 1830, was driven into exile ten years later and was put to death in 1842. He has been called the "Washington of Central America."

Across the plaza, from the main building, will stand the Administration palace, and to the right and left will be located the Horticultural and Floricultural buildings. A broad boulevard lined with stately trees will completely encircle the grounds, and beyond it will be located the hotels, theaters, restaurants and places of amusement. The lighting at night will be done by electricity, and a gravity railroad will carry sightseers to the top of a lofty plateau, from which may be obtained a magnificent view of what Humboldt called "the garden spot of the world."

The exhibits at the exposition will be classed in 17 groups, as follows: Food and its accessories; forestry and forest products, horticulture, viticulture, pomology, horses and mules, cattle and sheep, other animals used for food, flesh and their products, mines, minerals and metallurgy; machinery, transportation, electricity, manufactured articles, liberal arts, fine arts and unified governmental exhibits.

At the head of the exposition project is Dr. Policarpo Bonilla, the enterprising young president of Honduras, and he has very sensibly surrounded himself by a corps of assistants who are well qualified by previous experience to materially aid in making the fair a success. The president of the exposition commission is Senor Don E. Constantina Fiallos, who was secretary of the Pan-American congress and secretary of the legation of Honduras a few years ago. He is a civil engineer, a graduate of Columbia college and a writer and lecturer of ability.

Dr. W. T. Thackery of Chicago, who was division superintendent of the manufactures department of the World's fair, has been appointed director general of the proposed exposition. He took a special interest in the tobacco and sarsaparilla exhibit of Honduras at the World's fair and was Honduras' commissioner at the California Midwinter fair. He has been in Tegucigalpa for five months consulting with President Bonilla and other prominent promoters of the exposition.

Honduras is only two days from New Orleans and four from New York by steamer. The climate is delightful, the uplands being no warmer than a September day in the northern part of the United States, and the scenery is of surpassing grandeur. Not many miles from the exposition are old Spanish fortifications and relics of the Aztecs, the wonderful Indians conquered by Cortez. In Guatemala, near at hand, is the old city of Copan, which existed so long before the Aztecs that they possessed only the vaguest traditions concerning the extinct people who reared the imposing temples and quaintly carved monoliths that still puzzle the antiquarian.

It is believed that the merchants and manufacturers of the United States will find new or increased markets for their wares in Central America if they co-operate in making the exposition a success.

JAPANESE HAIRDRESSING.

The Sweet Little Woman Has Peculiar Ideas About Cleanliness.

The Japanese toilet is robbed of one of its finishing touches by the fact that no Japanese woman, gentle or simple, however fond she may be of looking into the sun shaped gun metal disk, supported on an artist's easel, which serves her for a looking glass, ever thinks of doing her own hair. The hair, after having all the last week's fat (the Japanese are exasperatingly clean in their persons) scoured out of it, is pomaded up afresh with the unctuous and not very olfactory pleasant compound, castory oily, and worked into a most elaborate coiffure, more like a huge glossy black butterfly than anything else. As it is only dressed once or twice a week, it is never taken down except by the barber.

But it is easy to sleep with your hair up when your pillow is merely a little wooden door scraper, with a hollow out in it to fit the neck, and a drawer in its base to hold the ornamental hairpins.

The true Japanese woman, whether she is rich or poor, uses a paper pocket handkerchief carried in one of her long hanging sleeves, with her tiny kiseru (pipe) and silk tobacco pouch, and another pouch containing a tiny comb, mirror and pigment for coloring the lips. She wears tabi white linen socks with a divided great toe, through which she inserts the strap of a delicate straw sandal or a high kiri wood clog, according to the dryness of the weather, either of them discarded the instant she enters a building, and her parasol will be of the national Japanese shape, whether it be of oiled paper or delicately embroidered silk, though to be sure the Sairey Gamp umbrella is about the first contamination from the west which her costume is likely to suffer.

But I must not say any more about the dress of O-Hane San, the sweet little woman whose whole lifelong lesson, to quote the "Onna Daigaku" (greater learning for women), is obedience. She never loses her temper, never uses a coarse or irritating word, and is always piquant and gracious and smiling, though she will die for her husband or her children or endure pollution for her parents gain with marble courage.—London Graphic.

The Trolley Riders In Boston.

A story, bogus on the face of it, has been going the newspaper rounds telling how a woman boarded a Cambridge car and asked the conductor on his return trip to "please step into Mr. Gaffey's drug store and tell him to go next door and ask the woman there to go over to my house and see if I put out my oil stove." This is poppycock, but a similar incident of which I am sure occurred in a Brookline car recently. The speaker was a young man, and he was asking the conductor to "go into the car stable when you get back and telephone up to my roommate to look in my other clothes and find 5 cents to pay you for my fare this trip, as I'm broke."—Boston Budget.

Crispi Bears No Malice.

Long and intimately as I have known him, in and out of office, I have never heard him speak one spiteful or malicious word of any man, and no matter what may have been his personal relations with men, if their views on public matters agree, co-operation is certain. The rancor and personality which form so discouraging an element in Italian politics have no place in Crispi's nature.—W. J. Stillman in Century.

How Quince Tastes.

A quince is about the most worthless thing we know anything about. It is not good raw, and when preserved has a taste that reminds you of an old maid's kiss. It is simply a suggestion of something good.—Atchison Globe.

Common Sense

Should be used in attempting to cure that very disagreeable disease, catarrh. As catarrh originates in impurities in the blood, local application can do no permanent good. The common sense method of treatment is to purify the blood, and for this purpose there is no preparation superior to Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Who's Got the Sheepskin?

In the early days Dr. M. W. Waterman, of Chicago, was a resident of Crookston, a boarder at the Box hotel. One day he was called away to the bedside of a sick relative in another state, and left his trunk and personal effects, among which was his diploma, at the hotel. Circumstances conspired to prevent his return to Crookston and for some reason his personal effects were not sent to him. For these he does not care, but he would like to recover that diploma and elsewhere he gives a notice that will make the diploma worth something to the person who has it if he will return it to the proper owner.

BERNHARDT AND SARDOU.

The Quarrel and Reconciliation of the Dramatist and Actress.

Speaking of Sardou and Bernhardt, the following story concerning the great French actress and the equally renowned playwright is vouched for by the correspondent of The Courrier des Etats-Unis:

The two who have achieved the greatest triumph in "Gismonda," M. Victorien Sardou and Mme. Sarah Bernhardt, were at swords' points in the beginning. This dislike dated from "Daniel Rochet," which Sardou gave to the Comedie Francaise after his nomination to the French academy. Sarah Bernhardt expected that Sardou would select her to create the role of heroine in the play, but he chose Mlle. Bertet instead; hence the anger of Mme. Bernhardt. When the actress and the author met, the former passed on the other side; the latter pulled his hat down over his eyes. Each murmured something not at all complimentary to the other.

Then Sarah Bernhardt left the Comedie Francaise, went to America, where she made her first triumphal tour, and returned to France. Upon her arrival in Paris she entered into negotiations with Raymond Deslande, manager of the Vaudeville. She asked nothing better than to play there. But what should she play? She did not wish to return to classical roles. She wanted an entirely new play, which should bring out all her qualities.

"There is only one man who can write the play you want," said Deslande. "That man is Sardou."

"Sardou!" cried the actress. "Such a disposition, incapable of doing justice to an artist. Moreover, irritable, brutal, a man who runs up against everybody, who"—

"Very well," replied Deslande, "let us say no more about it." He went to see Sardou and told him that he must have a play for Sarah Bernhardt.

"Sarah!" exclaimed the writer. "Sarah! Such a disposition! Crabbed, disagreeable, quarreling with everybody, who"—

"Very well, very well, it is quite understood."

And three months after Sardou read "Fedora" to Sarah, who, radiant, threw herself on the author's neck in the presence of Deslande.

"Ah! Deslande," said Sardou, "what did I tell you? How gentle she is! How sweet! How adorable!"

"And he!" rejoined Bernhardt. "How amiable he is! How he appreciates real talent, and how obliging! Embrace me, Raymond!"

CAT ELECTRICITY.

Those Who Rely on It For Curative Purposes Can Get It In Other Ways.

The London Lancet says:

The electrical effect produced by rubbing a cat's back is of course well known. It is also well known that this is frictional electricity, or, perhaps more correctly, the electricity of contact; that it is a surface effect produced by the rubbing; that it does not point to pre-existing electricity stored in the body of the animal, and that the person who, having concluded a massage, sinks into a chair declaring that his exhaustion is consequent on the loss of "the living galvanism" which he has imparted to the patient is a charlatan.

It is to be remembered that friction between any dissimilar substances always produces electricity, and in illustration of this the electrical effect sometimes produced in a dry atmosphere when the hair is combed on the body quickly divested of a flannel jersey may be instanced, or the classic experiment of rubbing a stick of sealing wax on a rabbit's fur may be called to mind. Those who are accustomed to rely on the curative effect of stroking a cat's back may find consolation in the last named experiment, inasmuch as it teaches them that when their "feline favorite" is no more health and strength may still be secured by gentle friction on its skin.

Apart, however, from questions of electro-physiology, it is instructive to learn that the presence of white in the color of a cat, unless the animal be whole colored, is a sign of weakness.

Promotion.

"How's that boy o' yourn gettin along in the city, Josiah?" asked one farmer of another.

"He's workin his way up right along."

"What's he doin?"

"He's workin fer the city."

"You don't tell me! What's he doin fer it?"

"He's drivin one o' them things they call a street sweeper—kind o' wipes up the road nights, you know. But, my, he's bein promoted! Fust off he was workin in the Twenty-fust ward. By an by he writ me that he was workin in the Eighteenth ward. Last week he writ that he was in the Twelfth ward now, an, I swan, you see if that feller don't fetch up in the Fust ward with his sweep cart yit!"—Youth's Companion.

Vandyke's Place In Art.

So far as portraiture goes, Vandyke occupies, with Titian and Velasquez, the first place. His works have an air of elegance and distinction and a mundane grace and courtliness naturally befitting his title of "painter to the king." The Italians called him "il pittore cavalieresco." Without the stamina and natural robustness of his great master, Rubens, his portraits are better in point of refinement and grace. But one must know his master to form a just appreciation of his position.—T. Cole in Century.

A comparison of the maximum temperature in different parts of the world shows that the great desert of Africa is by far the hottest. This vast plain, which extends 2,000 miles from east to west and 1,000 from north to south, has a temperature of 150 degrees F. in the hottest days of summer.

DIGGING TUNNELS.

THE PRESSURE MEN BEAR WHILE WORKING UNDER WATER.

Peculiar Sensations and Sometimes Fatal Results—Tunneling Through a Water Hole Under the Hudson River—Interesting Talk With an Air Lock Worker.

Laboring on the firm earth, with "all out of doors" to breathe, perspiring and mayhap grumbling at one's hard luck, a person seldom, if ever, stops to think that men work day after day deep down in the water or the mud, with none but artificial light to guide their movements and only the air that is pumped to breathe.

People who work in the open air would have only to work for a short time in a diver's suit, a caisson or an air lock, getting a taste of what it is like and how it feels, to be cured forever of grumbling at their lot and to thank their lucky stars that it has been ordained that they work on top of the earth. The work of a diver, his sensations while under water and his experiences have often been written about, but those of the air lock and caisson worker have not. While he does not face the danger of fouling pipes and lines, as does the diver, he stays down longer, gets warmer, and his great danger lies in the stagnation of blood and paralysis, resulting from the change of atmosphere.

Mr. R. C. Rapier of East Cambridge is an air lock worker and talks most interestingly. His work was mainly in the air locks used in building the great Hudson river tunnel. To a reporter he talked of some of the sensations, dangers and experiences. He said that, while a man working on the surface of the earth bears up an atmospheric pressure of 15 pounds to the inch, men in the locks bear a pressure of from 15 to 50 pounds of compressed air, according to the depth. The heaviest pressure ever worked under was borne by five divers on the Swedish coast—65 pounds. Four of these died five minutes after coming out.

While as a general thing the diver stands not nearly that amount of pressure and seldom stays down more than two hours, the men in the Hudson river tunnel stood a pressure of from 45 to 46½ pounds and worked in four hour shifts. Some men staid down 20 hours at a stretch, but did not work all the time, and Superintendent Haskins once staid down 24 hours. The sensations experienced are peculiar. When a man first steps in, there is a tingling in the ears and a pain in the head, and when he talks it is apparently through the nose. This is caused by the pressure, and the remedy is to hold the nose, close the mouth and blow against the ears. This relieves the pain and stops the sensation. When the pressure is all on, the worker feels all right and experiences no discomfort. Then there is a sort of exhilaration, and a man does more work in the lock than he could do outside.

Another peculiar thing about the action of the pressure is that a man may have liquor enough aboard when outside to just make him feel jolly, but when he steps into the lock he is as drunk as a loon. The danger lies in coming out of the pressure into the open air. It is then that a man is apt to suffer from stagnation of the blood and paralysis, caused by the change of atmosphere. Besides this a man may be attacked in the head or stomach with severe pains. Three out of five cases where the head and stomach are attacked result fatally.

Another severe malady resulting from the change is what is called the bends. This is the air getting in between the flesh and the bone. It is extremely painful and so severe that a quart of whisky administered in half an hour would not intoxicate the patient. The stagnation and paralysis are the worst dangers and do the work quickly. Many men have been keeled over by these causes, and not a few die. Old timers at the business sometimes get caught. Mr. Rapier himself was twice attacked. The remedy for this paralysis is a quick return to the air lock. The effect of the pressure varies on animals, as is shown by the mules used in the Hudson river tunnel. Some of these beasts are kept at work down below for a year, and on being brought up are worth more than when they were taken down. Others that had only been in the works four months had to be killed.

The men as a general thing do not remain a great many years at the business, and a man should never work at it after he is 40 years of age. Cutting a hole and building a tunnel through water is an extremely difficult thing and by many was thought to be impossible. Still it was done in the case of the Hudson river tunnel, and the method, as told by Mr. Rapier, is very interesting. The work on the tunnel had progressed until a body of water was struck. How to tunnel through this hole of water was a puzzling question. It was done in this way. A so called balloon was constructed by making a netting of wire rope and covering this netting with canvas. The interior of the balloon was then filled with blue clay and salt hay. When filled, the balloon, 30 feet in diameter, weighed 140 tons. The hole of water was then located, and with the aid of a huge steam derrick the balloon was dropped into the hole. Then several scowloads of dirt were dumped down on to the balloon, and the whole thing was left to settle.

At the end of ten days the work of cutting through the balloon was begun. This was a very difficult job. An idea of what hard cutting it was may be gained from the fact that it took two months to dig through the 30 feet. The plates and brick were going in as the work progressed.—Boston Herald.

FASCINATION BY SNAKES.

The Tongue Play of the Reptiles a Lure For Their Prey.

The pheasants which formed the subjects of the following observations were hatched out in an incubator from eggs kindly given me by Sir Cecil Miles. The eggs were taken from the hen and transferred to the incubator a few days before the young birds were due to emerge.

Two pheasants were hatched out at about 3 p. m. That evening, at about 6:30, a finely chopped egg was placed before them, but they showed no signs of pecking at it, nor did they peck at grain or sand next morning at 11 a. m. At 4 p. m. they began to peck, but seized very little. One struck repeatedly at a crumb of egg on the other's beak, but failed to seize it, though the other bird was quite still.

The little birds showed no signs of fear of me. They liked to nestle in my warm hand. My fox terrier was keen to get at them, much keener than with chicks, probably through scent suggestion. I placed two of the young pheasants, about a day old, on the floor and let him smell them, under strict orders not to touch them. He was trembling in every limb from excitement. But they showed no signs of fear, though his nose was within an inch of them. When the pheasants were a week old, I procured a large blindworm and placed it in front of the incubator drawer in which the birds slept at night. On opening the drawer they jumped out as usual and ran over the blindworm without taking any notice of it. Presently first one, then another, pecked vigorously at the forked tongue as it played in and out of the blindworm's mouth. Subsequently they pecked at its eye and the end of its tail.

This observation naturally leads one to surmise that the constant tongue play in snakes may act as a lure for young and inexperienced birds, and that some cases of so called fascination may be simply the fluttering of birds round this tempting object. I distinctly remember, when a boy, seeing a grass snake, with head slightly elevated and quite motionless, and round it three or four young birds fluttering nearer and nearer. It looked like fascination. It may have been that each hoped to be the first to catch that tempting but elusive worm! Presently they would no doubt be invited to step inside.—Nature.

HE HAD A NEW THING.

And Genius, as Is Always the Case, Got Its Reward.

Two men were seated at a small table near the front door waiting for their sandwiches and coffee when they were approached by a shabby stranger, who touched his hat and said:

"Gentlemen, may I ask a favor of one of you?"

They were silent. It was no new experience to them.

"What I wished to ask was, gentlemen," continued the stranger, "how to spell the word balloon."

They looked at one another in evident surprise and one asked, "The word 'balloon,' you say?"

"Yes, gentlemen. I got into a discussion with a friend, who says there is but one 'l.' I maintain there are two."

"Your friend's right," said one of the men at the table.

"No, he isn't," retorted the other. "You're right. Two 'l's.'

"Let me see, now," said the first. "B-a-l-double-o-n-bel-oon. I think you're wrong, Bill, and that this man's friend wins the bet."

"It's no bet," said the shabby stranger. "We simply got into an argument. You can see for yourself there is chance for an argument. If I had a pocket dictionary, I could tell in a minute. Gentlemen, would one of you loan me a dime with which to purchase one?"

They looked at him coldly for a moment and then each pulled out a dime and gave it to him.

"You're a good thing," said the first one.

"Yes, you've got something new," added the other.

But the shabby stranger did not smile. He simply thanked them, and said he would buy one for his friend also.—Chicago Record.

Orchids For Cut Flowers.

So many beautiful flowers drop their petals soon after cutting that they are out of favor with purchasers. The efforts of florists are generally in the direction of introducing such flowers as will hold their own for some time after cutting. It is possibly one of the leading advantages of the carnation that it lasts so long on the parlor table, and this is found to be true with many species of orchids which are coming into favor for cutting purposes, quite as much on account of this persistence as on account of their rarity and sweetness. In this closely related family the cypripedium is found particularly valuable. There are not only persistence, sweetness and curious features in the forms and colors of the flowers, but they also have the long stems which enable the American florists to use them without the necessity of lavishly stemming them.—Meehan's Monthly.

Free Lunch With a String to It.

In most of the free lunch places down town there is a nickel in the slot machine device, which is placed in close proximity to the lunch. So big is the gambling propensity in most men that they will frequently drop enough nickels into one of these machines to pay for a square meal and never "win out." These machines more than pay for the lunches set up by the proprietor.—Chicago Tribune.

Bursting Flywheels.

From a recent discussion regarding the bursting of flywheels it appears that, although a sudden change in momentum, as from putting on a load, may fracture the arms, it is probable that centrifugal stress from increased speed is a far more prevalent cause of flywheel accidents.—New York News.

A NOVEL GUARANTEE.

A COMPANY THAT FURNISHES CERTIFICATES TO WOOERS.

A Boon to the Busy Man With a Marriageable Daughter—Rather One Sided, as the Wife Is Not Bound—An Interviewer of Whom Something Was Known.

Seeing the sign over the door, I entered. "If you wish to confer with the president, sir," said the young man in front, "you will find him in his private office," and thanking him I entered the rear room, where a pleasant faced man greeted me cordially.

"Won't you be seated?" he said, grasping me by the hand. "Is your business—er—confidential?"

"Not at all," I replied. "As I was passing by I thought I would stop in and inquire into the nature and scope of the Lovers' Guarantee company, which I see advertised so extensively."

"Certainly," he responded. "I shall be only too glad to inform you what we are here for. The Lovers' Guarantee company was formed for the purpose of securing good husbands to all maidens matrimonially inclined, and the great success we have met with thus far proves that there is an excellent reason for our existence. The average man of affairs has little time to look up the character and antecedents of the young fellow who applies for his daughter's hand. We look him up, and if he is satisfactory he gives us a bond, which entitles him to a certificate guaranteeing him to be all that he claims. This bond may be good for five or ten years. A man's financial status is of course easy to determine, but it is into the finer attributes of character that we examine particularly. Our certificate is an absolute guarantee of the man. Of course we have to be particular, for should the wife at any time insist upon a separation and show cause under the contract we would have to pay all her legal expenses and furnish her a new husband or make over to her certain payments."

"But suppose," said I, "after the man is married off, there develops some hidden trait, some idiosyncrasy that causes unhappiness, but not separation, what do you do then?"

"Such cases," replied the president of the Lovers' Guarantee company, "are rare, but of course they do occur. In a case like this we examine into the cause of the difficulty, and if the man be wrong the fact that he is under bond gives us a power over him, and generally we bring him to terms."

"But," said I, "suppose the woman in the case is wrong?"

"This," explained the president, "is extremely unfortunate, as we have no means of reaching her direct, having no power over her. We can, however, advise the man what to do, generally with most felicitous results. As a rule, these differences come from ignorance on both sides. Where they are extreme and a separation is advisable we have in our employ the best lawyers, and divorces are obtained in the most private way.

"We have in our employ one of the most eminent phrenologists in the country, who examines the heads of all applicants. Our head physician, who gave up a large practice to come with us, has a growing staff of assistants, and these look carefully into the physical condition of the applicants. You may depend upon it that when an applicant has successfully run the gantlet we lay out for him he will make a good husband. We advise all young married people to have homes of their own, no matter how humble, and have a home bureau through which a member can obtain advice on the most desirable way to live, the best locations, a list of houses and apartments and the lowest rents. By this means we are enabled to make an arrangement with landlords so that our patrons can obtain certain discounts and privileges. Were you thinking—ahem!—of entering upon the new life?"

"Oh, no," I replied modestly. "I am already married, and," I added laughingly, "I don't suppose cases of this sort come under your jurisdiction."

"Indeed they do," replied the president of the Lovers' Guarantee company. "We have lately formed a department for the benefit of married people and find it to be a great success. For a small sum yearly, in advance, we furnish ladies with advice as to the proper management of husbands and direct them how to act in special emergencies. For instance, should a husband be called away too frequently at night 'on business,' imbibe too freely—I may say this is one of our greatest obstacles—or should he become ill natured or nontractable, we tell her what to do."

"Is this department secret?"

"Not at all," he responded. "Indeed we invite publicity. Such is our reputation that the mere fact made known to a man that his name is on our books will have a tendency to bring him to his senses."

"My dear sir," said I warmly as I rose to go, "you are accomplishing a great work, and I am glad I called in to see you." Then, thanking him, I was about to depart when he stopped me courteously.

"Excuse me," he said, "but would you mind giving me your name? I always like to take down the names of all our friends."

"Certainly not," said I. "I would just as soon as not, as it is just possible I may want to advise with you myself later on. My name, sir, is Witherby."

A bright and engaging smile came over the face of the president of the Lovers' Guarantee company. "Ah, yes, indeed," he exclaimed. "J. Scott Witherby, isn't it?"

"That's it," I replied, dumfounded, a lump rising in my throat. "How the mischief, sir, did you learn my name?"

"Very easily," he responded cheerfully as he reached over into his desk and handed me pamphlet B 146, on "If You Are a Husband, Don't Be a Crank." "Your wife was in here only yesterday."—J. Scott Witherby in New York World.

it is easy to steal or ring watches from the pocket. The thief gets the watch in one hand, the chain in the other and gives a short, quick jerk—the ring slips off the watch stem, and away goes the watch, leaving the victim only the chain.

SURROUNDED BY MYSTERY!

A Great Mistake.

A recent discovery is that headache dizziness, dullness, confusion of the mind etc., are due to derangement of the nerve centers which supply the brain with nerve force; that indigestion, dyspepsia, neuralgia wind in stomach, etc., arise from the derangement of the nerve centers supplying these organs with nerve fluid or force. This is likewise true of many diseases of the heart and lungs. The nerve system is like a telegraph system as will be seen by the accompanying cut. The little white lines are the nerves which convey the nerve force from the nerve centers to every part of the body, just as the electric current is conveyed along the telegraph wires to every station, large or small. Ordinary physicians fail to regard this fact; instead of treating the nerve centers for the cause of the disorders arising therefrom they treat the part affected.

Franklin Miles, M. D., LL. B., the highly celebrated specialist and student of nervous diseases, and author of many noted treatises on the latter subject long since realized the truth of the first statement, and his Restorative Nervine is prepared on that principle. Its success in curing all diseases arising from derangement of the nervous system is wonderful, as the thousands of unsolicited testimonials in possession of the company manufacturing the remedy amply prove.

Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine is a reliable remedy for all nervous diseases, such as headache, nervous debility, prostration, sleeplessness, dizziness hysteria, sexual debility, St. Vitus dance, epilepsy, etc. It is sold by all druggists on a positive guarantee, or sent direct by the Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind., on receipt of price, $1 per bottle, six bottles for $5, express prepaid.

Restorative Nervine positively contains no opiates or dangerous drugs.

STATE OF MINNESOTA, COUNTY OF POLK, ss. In Probate Court, general term, Jan. 7, 1895.

In the matter of the estate of Charles S. Spendley, deceased.

On reading and filing the petition of Elsie H. Spendley setting forth the amount of personal estate that has come into her hands, the disposition thereof, and how much remains undisposed of; the amount of debts outstanding against said deceased, as far as the same can be ascertained; the legacies unpaid, and a description of all the real estate, excepting the homestead, of which the said deceased died seized, and the condition and value of the respective portions or lots thereof; the persons interested in said estate, with their residences, and praying that license be to her granted to sell all of the real estate of which the said deceased died seized. And it appearing, by said petition, that there is not sufficient personal estate in the hands of said Elsie H. Spendley to pay said debts, the legacies or expenses of administration, and that it is necessary for the payment of such debts, legacies or expenses, to sell the whole of said real estate;

IT IS THEREFORE ORDERED, That all persons interested in said estate, appear before this Court, on Monday, the 4th day of February, 1895 at 10 o'clock, A. M., at the Probate office in the City of Crookston, in said county, then and there to show cause (if there be any) why license should not be granted to said Elsie H. Spendley to sell so much of the real estate of said deceased as shall be necessary to pay such debts, legacies and expenses.

AND IT IS FURTHER ORDERED, That this order shall be published once in each week for three successive weeks prior to said day of hearing, in the POLK COUNTY JOURNAL, a weekly newspaper printed and published at Crookston, in said county.

Dated at Crookston the 7th day of January, A. D. 1895. By the Court.

Don't worry. Don't run in debt. Don't trifle with your health. Don't try experiments with medicines. Don't waste your time and money on worthless compounds. Don't be persuaded to take a substitute for Ayer's Sarsaparilla. It is the best blood-purifier.

The Common Cold.

Medical writers have recently called attention to the fact that the common cold, which most people suppose they "catch" by undue exposure, though they cannot, for the life of them tell how or when, is frequently the result of a debilitated condition of the body, and that the head-ache, catarrhal trouble, sore throat and other accompaniments of a cold are signs of an impure condition of the blood. This explanation is at least reasonable, and it is desirable that it should be understood, as it points to the proper and only method by which this uncomfortable and in many instances, dangerous condition may be avoided or overcome. It is not uncommon to hear people remark that they suffer constantly with "a cold" from early fall until the warm weather returns in the spring. This is undoubtedly due to the fact that the system is weakened, that it lacks vitality, is poorly nourished and can not resist the severer trials that come with the coming of fall and winter weather.

Of course the remedy for these ailments, and the preventive, if they have not already made their encroachments, consists in a course of treatment which will build up and strengthen the physical system. In the first place the blood must be purified and invigorated so that it can carry health and vitality to all the organs of the body, enabling the heart and lungs, the liver, bowels and skin to perform their proper functions. The digestive organs must then be stimulated and strengthened and made to do their part in supplying the wasted and much needed strength to the system.

For the work of purifying the blood and giving strength and vitality to the system, nothing has yet been found equal to Hood's Sarsaparilla. The burden of the testimonials from people who have taken Hood's Sarsaparilla is that it purifies their blood, removes pimples, boils and all similar eruptions, gives them an appetite and makes them feel strong. This is just what is needed to fortify the system against that condition for which people in general have no better name than a "cold." A few bottles of Hood's Sarsaparilla taken at this season would be sufficient to give that tone and stimulus to the organs of the body which are indispensable to health, especially in trying weather, and certainly, a few dollars expended now in taking measures to prevent sickness or even the discomforts of a long continued "cold" would be better than a fit of sickness and heavy doctor's bills later on. In buying medicine, as in buying anything else, it is well to see that you get an honest article, and such Hood's Sarsaparilla is everywhere recognized to be.

FEBRUARY.

Our present calendar is mainly the work of the Romans. (to whom, by the way, the world is much indebted for civilized government) and it is therefore not strange that the names of the months should be Latin ones. This month was not, however, in the original Roman calendar, but was added by King Numa, who when he increased the number by two placed January at the beginning and February at the end. It received its name either from the word FEBRUARE, to purify, or from FEBRUA, the festival of purification, which was celebrated about this time. In the year 452 B. C., the decemvirs changed the order of the months, making December the close of the year, and placing February after January. This position it has since retained. The old heathen customs of purification from the labors and sins of the year by sacrifices and penances in February, have passed entirely away. People now take simply a rest from both business and dissipation by a journey somewhere, escaping from the ennui (and sometimes the temptations) which ensues on being too constantly in the same place and occupation. If you contemplate a journey for such reasons, or any other, an important pre-requisite is that your railroad ticket should be over the Burlington Route. Maps, rates, and information will be cheerfully furnished by your home agent or you can write to W. J. C. Kenyon, Gen. Pass. Agent, St. Paul, Minn.

THE Royal Baking Powder is the purest and strongest baking powder made. It has received the highest award at the U. S. Gov't official investigation, and at all the Great International Expositions and World's Fairs wherever exhibited in competition with others.

It makes the finest, lightest, sweetest, most wholesome bread, cake and pastry. More economical than any other leavening agent.

REX MORITUR EXSUL.

"We know no king, no God, no master, we!"
What wonder when your passions know no master?
When morbid, moonstruck, measureless vanity,
The mock of nations, whirl you faster
Toward the steep doom of downfall and disaster—
A ruin deeper than the unfathomed sea?
Vainglorious fools, your chronic rage is vain!
Birth royal is nature's gift, as brawn or brain,
And natural right thrones high above your mob
Of silly mouths and maws, whose slender sense
The froth of individual impotence
Stirs to ridiculous rage that fain would rob
The sun of right to shine in heaven, if thence
Absinthe nerves might thrill and pothouse pulses throb.

POLICE AND THE POODLES.

Ladies Who Want Officers Detailed to Protect Their Pet Dogs.

"Some folks have strange ideas as to the duties of the police force," said the desk sergeant.

"When I was at the North Chicago avenue station, for instance, I remember a case. A lady rang me up one afternoon and said she wanted two policemen sent to her residence at once. She lived on [illegible] avenue, and when she told me her name I recognized it as that of a well known business man. I asked what the policemen were wanted for.

"'They will be told when they get here,' said she.

"'But, madam,' said I, 'I couldn't send two policemen to your house without knowing what they were going for, even if I wanted to. It's against the rules.'

"She thought it was a very strange rule, she said, which compelled her to state her private business over a telephone, but she finally told me what the trouble was. She said she had been out walking with her little dog, and that two very suspicious looking men had been watching her from the other side of the street. She was sure they meant to steal the dog, and she wanted them looked up. When I explained to her that we couldn't arrest anybody on such evidence, she gave a few more opinions about the police and rang off.

"I had a call something like this from a residence in Bellevue place. This one came by phone, too, and was from a lady. She wanted the patrol wagon sent to her house right away. She declined to tell me at first what it was wanted for, but when I refused to do anything until I knew something further she said an ugly dog was hanging about her back steps, and that she couldn't let her dogs out to play in the yard, as this dog insisted on playing with them and was not the kind of a dog she wanted her dogs to associate with. I told her that I couldn't send the patrol wagon on such an errand, but said I would have the dog taken to the pound by the wagon on its way there next day. She said she didn't want the dog there overnight, and I suggested that perhaps he would go away of his own accord when he saw he was being snubbed. She hung up her phone with a bang, and as I learned afterward reported me at headquarters."—Chicago Times.

There Were Two Kinds of Fish.

Mr. Broker says he has changed his restaurant down town, "so he can know what he's getting." His mind got uncertain about his old place after an experience he had last Friday. Friday is "fish day" at this place, and Mr. B. likes fish when it is "just right." So he cast his eye over the bill of fare and remarked: "Lizzie, how is the boiled codfish today? If it is good, you may bring me some; but, you mind, if it isn't good I don't want it. Do you see?"

Lizzie saw and departed, and then, Mr. Broker says, he heard her call down the shaft of the dumb waiter in the rear, "One boiled cod, please, off the new fish!"—Pittsburg Bulletin.

The Air We Breathe.

A new and novel instrument is the koniscope, or dust testing apparatus. It is not a complicated scientific machine, being solely intended for estimating in an easy and simple manner the amount of pollution and number of dust particles in the atmosphere. The action of the instrument is based on certain color phenomena associated with what is called "cloudy condensation of air," and which can be produced by steam jets, high or low temperature of the air, the increased number of dust nuclei, etc. In working the koniscope the air is drawn into the apparatus by means of a common air pump and quickly passed to the "test tubes," which are fitted with glass at both ends. When the tube thus charged is held toward the light, various colors, from pure white to nearly black blue, according to the purity or impurity of the sample under test, are indicated. The dust particles also form an important factor in these tests, the variation in their number causing the mirror to throw all the colors of the rainbow.—St. Louis Republic.

Great Northern Extension.

YANKTON, S. D., Dec. 21.—The Great Northern is securing the necessary right of way to reach the river where the proposed bridge across the Missouri is to be located, and it is the belief here that the bridge will be built during the coming year.

One and Two Pound Prints.

Major Wilson of the Elgin board of trade says: "Dairymen who are receiving from 50 cents to $1 a pound for their butter have adopted the method of putting it up in from one to two pound prints and delivering it in this way, and it is generally believed that butter put up in this way is superior in quality. We found one of the large commission houses in Denver where they were receiving from their creameries large shipments of butter in pound and two pound prints, and their experience was very favorable to its being handled in that way for the retail trade in that city. Creamery men can do themselves, we think, great good in increasing their profits and sales by beginning in a moderate way this method of putting up butter in small quantities suitable to be delivered direct to the retail trade."

Japanese Love For Children.

Next to their frugality and exquisite neatness a remarkable thing about the Japanese is their great love for the little folks. They have an extraordinary talent for making their doll babies happy. They are forever inventing comical toys and designing fantastic little playthings to amuse them. With us the grandfathers and grandmammas are the children's playfellows and best friends. Over in the sunny little empire all the world has nothing more important to do than provoke the pleasure of his own child or the Mr. Little Boy or Miss Little Girl of his neighbor, as they are always called. At the bazaar, on fete days, at festivals and concerts, the indescribable little creatures are seen pickaback, with their sweet, round yellow arms tightened lovingly about some big sister's or big brother's neck. They have peppered jam, iced beans and pickled sweetmeats to their hearts' content, delicious tarts jellied to laurel or lemon leaf, and as many dolls, kites and colored lanterns as they can possibly carry away from the booths.—Tokyo Letter.

Fish, Flesh, Herring.

"Neither fish nor flesh nor good red herring" occurs in Dryden's Epilogue to his Duke of Guise (182). The Epilogue takes the form of a dialogue between the actress who spoke it and a Trimmer, and ends with this exclamation:

D—d neuters, in their middle way of steering,
They're neither fish nor flesh nor good red herring.

DISTRICT COURT.

roceedings of the District Court, as Seen by the Journal Court Reporter

WEDNESDAY, JAN. 30, 1895.

The case of Otto Sall vs. L. H. ofthus, an appeal from justice ourt, was the only case tried to-day. J. Montague appearing for the laintiff and Wm. Watts for the deendant. It appears that the case riginated in Justice Hunt's court t McIntosh, and was decided in faor of the defendant. The case was hen appealed to a justice in Fosston, hich said justice set aside the judgment of the other justice. The case vas then appealed to this court and ecided in favor of the defendant.

The gentlemen from East Grand orks, J. S. Dwyer, W. D. Russel and ugh Quigley, who were arrested or contempt were brought before he court to give an account of their eeds done in the Thompson arrest and re-arrest case. It appears from ll the evidence in the case that Arhur Thompson, a barber of Grand orks, N. D., appeared before the rand jury to testify upon the queson of gambling, etc., in East Grand orks. He appeared here on the 21st f January. On that day, after beng before the grand jury a warrant vas sworn out by W. D. Russell harging Thompson with offering to ake a bribe of $100 and not testify efore the grand jury. He was taken efore Justice Holt and waived examination and was allowed to go y Judge Ives on his own recogniance, awaiting further action of the grand jury. On last Sunday night, he 27th, he and his wife were on their way to this city to appear beore the grand jury again. When be ame to East Grand Forks he was again apprehended by Hugh Quigley and placed in jail; W. D. Russel being the complainant and J. S. Dwyer the justice issuing the warrant; the charge in the last complaint being that he offered to take $200 and swear not against the fair city on the east side of the Red. He waived examination there and was committed to jail in default of bonds. On Monday night Assistant County Attorney Martin O'Brien went over and by irrefutable expositions of the law to the officious gentlemen who sent Mr. Thompson to jail, succeeded in convincing said trio that the best thing they could do was to send the prisoner to the county seat. In charge of Deputy Vick, Thompson was brought to Crookston Monday night. Tuesday morning be was brought before the Court and upon examining the commitment papers, and seeing it was the same charge as he was arrested on and brought before Justice Holt on the 21st, and upon which he was amenable to the grand jury, the Court ordered the prisoner discharged. The commitment papers show that the warrant was issued on the 28th; the man was arrested the 27th. Immediately following this a warrant was issued for the three gentlemen, Dwyer, Russel and Quigley, to appear and show cause, if any there be, why they should not be punished for contempt of court. They appeared on Wednesday afternoon. Mr. Dwyer was the first to stand forth and give an account of his connection with the matter. He told the Court that he did not know of the man being arrested on the same charge before. He had heard something of it but understood this to be a different charge. He also asked an attorney at Grand Forks if such a warrant could be issued, and he was told it could be. That he did not hear that Thompson had been bound over to appear before the grand jury until at the trial. The Court allowed him, he being an officer of the county, to appear in his own recognizance on Friday at 10 o'clock.

W. D. Russell, the man who swore out the complaints against Thompson, was asked by the Court if he knew, at the time he swore out this last warrant, of the proceedings had before Justice Holt, Russell replied "I did." "What was your object in making that complaint," was asked by the Court. Russell answered "Judge Montague told me I could swear out a warrant for a different offense as soon as I got home." Q. 'Judge Montagus was your advisor?" A. Yes sir.

Q. "Did you know at time that the grand jury was in session?"

A. Yes sir.

Q. Did you know that this case had been passed upon by this court and Justice Holt, and that be was held by this court to appear before the grand jury?

A. He told me to make the complaint on a different offense.

Q. What other offense?

A. One offer be made to me he would take $100 and skik out of the country, and another he would take $200.

Q. That's the only reason?

A. Yes. I did just as Judge Montague told me.

Mr. Russell did not like to go much farther, and told the Court that Mr. Montague would appear for him. To this the court remarked: "I do not think I can permit Judge Montague to appear in this case or any other case until he has purged himself of the contempt he is now under by his actions in this matter."

Q. Judge Montague advised you in this suit before Judge Holt in the first place?—He drew the complaint and warrant?

A. Yes sir.

Mr. Russell and Mr. Quigley were placed under bonds in the sum of $500 for their appearance Friday morning.

THURSDAY MORNING, JAN. 31.

Not much of interest took place in court to-day until late in the afternoon; at that time fourteen indictments were reported to the court by the grand jury. Several such missives were sent in the day before, and as a result, Hugh Quigley, of East Grand Forks, Dan Sullivan, of the same place, appeared in court; Mr. Sullivan to answer to the charge of allowing gambling to be carried on in his place of business, and Quigley for failure to perform his duty as an officer, allowing houses of ill fame to be run in the city. A. R. Holston and R. J. Montague appeared and put in the usual motion (only a little more so) to set aside the indictments on various and numerous grounds. The motion was overruled and the defendant's entered pleas of "not guilty," and were placed under bonds, each in the sum of $500, with a requirement to keep the peace and obey the law.

Up to this time Mr. Montague had maintained a very noticeable silence. The Court then called up the contempt proceedings, and asked Judge Montague for an explanation of his side of the matter. The court told him that he understood from the information given by Mr. Russell that he (Montague) advised the bringing of these complaints and issuing of warrants against Thompson and advised the bringing of another complaint after T. was bound over to the grand jury and wanted to know if that was so. Mr. Montague went into the full details of the matter, saying that Russell came to him with a complaint that Thompson came to him and offered to take $100 and skip the country, and upon failure to get that he offered to take $200, and swear he had seen no gambling in East Grand Forks. Mr. Montague said that he drew the first complaint charging Thompson with offering to accept a bribe of $100. He further said he advised Russell that he had another cause to swear out another complaint on when he got home—the $200 offer. He said he had given the advice all at the same time and it was his honest opinion that there were two causes for action. He was asked by the court if he had seen Russell and talked about the matter after the first warrant was served, and been before Justice Holt and sent to this court. To which Mr. Montague replied: "I think not; I saw him and spoke to him, but I don't think with reference to this matter."

Court: "With this explanation I shall permit you to be excused. But I want it understood that when a matter of this kind is in this court the Court has entire jurisdiction of it and no lower court has any right to interfere. I take it for granted you are telling the truth, and I hope I shall never have occasion to call attention to such matters again."

The grand jury finished investigating the Thompson bribery case and dismissed it. Be it remembered that this man Thompson claimed that he was approached first and offered money if he would not testify against them, and that he so informed Mr. Childs and was by him advised to take the money and bring it before the grand jury.

FEBRUARY 1st, 1895.

Grand jurors M. R. Brown and M. P. DeWolf suspended, pending investigation, by the balance of the jury, for bribery.

The grand jury assembled at 9:30 and thereupon Mr. M. R. Brown and Mr. DeWolf were requested to leave the room while matters pertaining to them were being investigated. They remained out all the day. It seems that during the interim from adjournment Thursday and convening Friday morning, some very startling evidence came before Foreman Childs that caused the turn in almost the end of the path this special grand jury has trodden. Some of the people against whom indictments were found claimed to know that money was being used to influence certain jurors' votes; and because they did not get the looked for protection, felt like retaliating by giving out the facts as they knew them. J. J. Molstad testified that about Jan. 20, Dan Sullivan came to him and asked if he had $250 he could get, telling him that a new deal was on and that they must buy M. R. Brown. Molstad told him he had it at the Scandia Bank. Sullivan wanted him to get it of some friend because he did not want to go to the bank as they were against them. Molstad told him he could get it from Anton Erickson for him and went to Erickson to get it. Erickson got it from the bank and gave it to Molstad. Molstad went back to his saloon where Sullivan was waiting and gave the money to Sullivan; D. Sullivan giving Molstad his check on East Grand Forks bank for it, requesting Molstad not to cash it that day as it would cause suspicion. He was to have the money for Molstad the next day. Molstad asked Dan Sullivan who was to approach M. R. Brown with it, and Dan told him Tim Sullivan was, as he was an old friend of Brown. The next day Erickson went to Molstad for the money and Molstad gave him the Sullivan check. Erickson and Mr. Ellington of the Scandia bank corroborated Mr. Molstad on the bank transaction and that the Sullivan check came through the bank. Molstad further testified that T. Sullivan came back afterward and told him that he got M. R. Brown all right and that he was working with them.

The testimony against M. P. DeWolf was given by Molstad, and was to the effect that at the time the Russell bribery matter came up, DeWolf, with others, were in Molstad's saloon, and that DeWolf told Molstad to do everything in his power to save Russell and they would save him. Molstad said he understood that to mean that they would not indict him.

Late Friday afternoon the grand jury handed in several indictments and two presentments, one against M. R. Brown for accepting a bribe and the other against M. P. DeWolf for bribery.

The Court thereupon informed Mr. Brown and DeWolf that they were excused from duty on the grand jury, pending the investigation of the presentments. Mr. Brown asked the court to be heard, and was informed that the case would be referred to Justice Holt Saturday morning for investigation.

The cases of M. Schumaker vs. W. G. Roberts and Great Northern R'y. Co., garnishee, and M. Schumaker vs. E. M. Sebastian and G. N. R'y. Co., garnishee, were tried. Mr. McDermott, of Grand Forks, for plaintiff, and Charles S. Marden, of Barnesville, for defendant. The cases were appealed from justice court, where the decisions were in favor of plaintiff. The court reversed the decision of the lower court.

The contempt proceedings were disposed of to-day. The court, after further questioning Mr. Dwyer, said: "In consideration of your being a judicial officer of the county, and there don't seem to be any malice on your part in the matter, the court will discharge you and hope you will not get in the same position again.

Chief Quigley was then called up again and asked several questions and the chief said Thompson told him he was going to Crookston to appear before the grand jury. He said the warrant was put in his hands and he arrested him.

The court ordered that Hugh Quigley pay a fine of $100 for contempt of court, and in default of payment stand committed to the county jail three months.

Ed. George made a motion to take the matter to the supreme court.

STATE LEGISLATURE

TWENTY-NINTH BIENNIAL SESSION

Tuesday, Jan. 29.

SENATE—The senate held two sessions during the day and considerable routine business was transacted. At the opening of the morning session President Day was presented with a gavel, the gift of the employes of the senate. He responded briefly.

On motion of Senator Wyman a joint resolution relating to the mineral leases and mineral contracts was taken from committee and the rules suspended and the resolution given its final passage. It forbids the issuance of any more leases.

The special order for the afternoon session was the contested election case of Probstfield vs. Smith. The committee on elections submitted a report favoring the seating of Senator Smith. After a lengthy argument a vote was taken and the committee report was unanimously adopted.

HOUSE—For the first time this session the house took up general orders in committee of the whole. The proceeding savored greatly of an experiment, and was more for the purpose of initiating inexperienced statesmen into the mysteries of the lawmaking craft than to meet any pressing need of business. Henry Feig occupied the chair. Three important bills, relating to claims of Aitkin county commissioners, wolf bounties and the aiming of firearms were considered in the committee and recommended to pass.

The new capital bill was introduced in the house and senate during the forenoon. The bill does not make any changes over the bill of two years ago, but does arrange matters so that there can be some progress in the work of construction during the next two years.

Wednesday, Jan. 30.

SENATE—The senate in executive session confirmed all the appointments made by the governor except those of Berndt Anderson, as state dairy and food commissioner, and L. G. Powers, as labor commissioner. These were made a special order for Tuesday next.

The house resolution favoring the election of senators by direct vote of the people was taken up and, after some discussion, was unanimously adopted.

A large number of bills were reported back from committees, and S. F. 115, a deficiency bill to help out the treasury of the supreme court, was passed, as was also S. F. 31, to transfer money from the text book fund to the current school fund.

HOUSE—Quite a number of measures were reported from different committees and placed on general orders. A score of bills were introduced but none of them of great importance. A sleeping car bill by Representative Dare regulates charges and makes companies responsible for valuables of passengers.

Thursday, Jan. 31.

SENATE—D. M. Clough called the senate to order for the last time, being sworn in as governor immediately after convening. A half hour recess was taken to give an opportunity for congratulations. The bill amending the union label law was passed. In committee of the whole several minor bills were recommended to pass.

HOUSE—The committee on public lands recommended that H. F. 145, to transfer $250,000 of the capitol fund so that it may become immediately available, be passed, and that H. F. 6—to repeal the capitol bill—be indefinitely postponed.

Senate file 52, the Jones bill to authorize the governor to appoint a committee to determine the best method of destroying the Russian thistle and to act in harmony with similar commissions from other states, was passed.

Other bills were passed:

To repeal chapter 412, laws of 1889, relating to the election of county commissioners in the county of Aitkin; amending chapter 147, laws of 1893, relating to bounty on wolves, and an act to prohibit the aiming of firearms.

Friday, Feb. 1.

SENATE.—The most interesting thing in the senate during the day was the fight on the committee on legislative expenses. When this committee was appointed no one suspected that it would ever be charged with extravagance, and there was general surprise when the committee decided to favor clerks for committees that in the past hardly knew what a clerk was. The report was referred back to the committee. Four minor measures were passed and the senate adjourned until Monday at 8 p. m.

HOUSE.—The committee on elections reported to the house during the morning in the Furlong-Allen contest in favor of allowing Furlong, the contestee, to hold his seat. The report of the committee was made a special order for Wednesday morning at 11 o'clock.

After the reports of committees and introduction of bills the house passed four measures. One of these was Baston's pesthouse measure. The house adjourned until Tuesday.

Monday, Feb. 4.

SENATE.—The short meeting of the senate in the evening was interesting from the nature of several of the nine bills introduced. Senator Theden fathered a unique plan for inducing neighbors to live in peace and not fatten legal gentlemen by "going to law" on slight provocation, or on none; but to settle any little difference at slight expense to themselves. It proposes to introduce into Minnesota the Scandinavian "courts of conciliation." Senator Howard's bill recasting the law relating to insolvency and assignments for the benefit of creditors, was introduced. Senator Sheehan presented a bill abolishing the co-insurance clause in fire insurance policies, and making the face of a policy prima facie evidence of the value of the property destroyed.

A Great Battle

Is continually going on in the human system. The demon of impure blood strives to gain victory over the constitution, to ruin health, to drag victims to the grave. Hood's Sarsaparilla is the weapon with which to defend one's self, drive the desperate enemy from the field, and restore bodily health for many years.

THE HAYWARD TRIAL

IT IS DRAGGING SLOWLY ALONG AT MINNEAPOLIS.

No Conclusion Likely to Be Reached Before the End of the Month—Defense Will Attempt to Prove Blixt a Liar and Adry Hayward Insane.

MINNEAPOLIS, Feb. 4.—The trial of the Hayward case will probably not be over before March 1, and the third week finds the state scarcely started upon the case. Up to date there have been nine days spent in securing a jury and opening the case. Then the taking of testimony was interrupted by the illness of a juror, and two entire days were lost in this way. As a matter of fact the only evidence thus far adduced to the making of a case has been the establishment of the murder by the identification of the body, the circumstances of its finding and the formal testimony of the coroner and his deputy that death was caused, in their opinion, by the bullet wound in the head.

Intentions of the Defense.

While W. W. Erwin and his conferrees are trying to keep the probable line of defense in the Hayward case from the public, little by little some parts of it are unfolding themselves. The public was made aware of portions as soon as Mr. Erwin began his cross-examination of jurors, then followed it up with more when the cross-examination of witnesses began. In this way it was given out that insanity would be an element, that the defense was looking for that third man, the one with the pointed shoes, that the murder must have been done differently from the manner described by Blixt, that there must have been blows struck

Before the Shot Was Fired.

The fact of the matter is, the defense is feeling quite buoyant. This is the way its friends reason. In the first place, there is that reasonable doubt. Defined, this means that the state must show its case in such a manner that there is absolutely no other theory than a theory of guilt. If, after the defense has assailed the state's testimony, and introduced its own, the jury can follow out a theory of innocence from the facts. Under its oath, the jury is bound to accept that theory in preference to the one of guilty. It is not by a preponderance of evidence that a jury must select which one of these two theories is probable, but if the theory of innocence is at all tenable, or even possible, the jury must accept it and acquit.

Will Try to Impeach Blixt.

The defense has several hard points to contend with. To begin with, there is that damaging confession of Blixt staring them in the face as the one huge specter. Mr. Erwin brushes that aside. Blixt is a liar. He has told various stories, all differing. The defense secures some of the people who have heard some of these stories, so that if Blixt makes a slip under cross-examination he can be impeached. Erwin hopes with his wonderful skill at cross-examination to make the jury think Blixt is lying in order to screen a third party. This they think will be easy, for Blixt will be so much potter's clay in Erwin's hands. They do not fear Blixt as much as Adry.

Is Adry Insane?

Adry is apparently a gentleman and a man to whom the jury will listen. What will be done with this lesser specter? The defense will try, nay, says it will show that Adry Hayward is, and has been, as visionary as the most chronic imbecile, harmless, but incompetent. This is the intent. Insanity will be shown to have been in the family for years back, to add to the claim. For this the depositions from Illinois will be used, if the court allows them.

So far Erwin expects smooth sailing. What next? It is necessary to place before the mind's eye of the jury the possibily of a third party being in with Blixt. The defense will try to show, at least by innendo, that Catherine Ging had business transactions with other men aside from Harry, who was only one of her trusted male acquaintances. Take it all in all some lively sessions are promised this week.

DOCTOR'S TESTIFY.

Testimony in the Hayward Case of an Expert Nature.

MINNEAPOLIS, Feb. 5.—The testimony of Dr. Nippert, when he was again placed on the stand in the Hayward case, was of an expert character. The defense is interested in establishing that the fractures found in the skull of the dead woman were sufficient to have caused death without the bullet from Blixt's revolver. The fractures, according to Dr. Nippert's autopsy, penetrated both the bony coverings of the skull and were of about equal extent, something like four inches in length on both sides of the head. Dr. Nippert was on the stand the greater portion of the day. Erwin asked him thousands of questions in regard to the post mortem and exhausted all his adroitness in an endeavor to neutralize the doctor's judgment, namely, that the fractures of the skull had been made subsequent to death by the gunshot wound. Dr. Nippert's testimony was clear and explicit on that point, and he reiterated his opinion as often as Mr. Erwin put the question to him.

The line of cross-examination pursued by Mr. Erwin tends altogether to the discrediting of Blixt's testimony. It was claimed in the opening address by the state that, according to Blixt's statements, the buggy after being turned, and in this way the prosecution evidently intends to account for the fractures. The defense will introduce testimony tending to establish that the weight of four such buggies as that driven by Miss Ging that night would have produced no such breaks in the skull as those shown in the autopsy, and to render still more evident the fact that she was battered with a heavy weapon before being shot.

Went Over Miss Ging's Body

Blixt, in his statement, says not a word about having struck the young woman before shooting her. In fact, he denies this absolutely, and therein his story will probably conflict with the expert evidence as to the nature of the

Dr. Russell's Testimony.

Previous to the appearance of Dr. Nippert to the stand Dr. Russell was called. The doctor lives but a short distance from the scene of the murder, on Hennepin avenue, and he was called on the night of its occurrence on the supposition that the young woman still lived. Dr. Russell corroborated Ehrhart in the statement that the body lay right side down to the road, balancing the statements of Policemen Moore and Fox, who asserted that it lay left side down. His testimony was corroborative of all that has gone before as to the position of the hat, in that it lay close to the body and near the shoulder. The doctor described his visit to the Scene of the Crime.

He was called about 9 o'clock and thought he arrived there about 10 minutes afterward. As to the appearance of clothing and other indications about the body, he agreed with the other witnesses. There was a pool of blood under the head. He had formed the opinion after the body was removed and he learned of the revolver wound, that the blood must have come from that wound. At the time he arrived Dr. Russell thought the young woman must have been dead something like half an hour.

Dr. Hill Corroborates.

Dr. Hill was the next witness. His examination consumed but a few minutes. The same general questions were put to him as to Dr. Nippert. He testified on the same line as his colleague, and was certain the fractures were produced after death by the pistol wound.

The questioning of the defense appeared to be towards establishing that Miss Ging died from the blows on her skull which produced those fractures, and that the shot which penetrated her skull, while necessarily of a fatal character, was fired to hasten the end or to divert suspicion from the actual conditions surrounding the crime.

HAYWARD IS CONFIDENT.

He Is Perfectly Satisfied With the Condition of the Case.

MINNEAPOLIS, Feb. 5.—Harry Hayward was particularly radiant when he appeared in court at the opening of the morning session. He was the healthiest looking man in the room, and his composure is not impaired in the slightest degree.

"I see by the papers," he said, "that public opinion is now willing to admit the possibility of an ingenious lie on the part of Blixt. Well, I have been aware that he was lying for a good many weeks," and the accused man laughed heartily at this sally. "It is gratifying to note that the evidence obtained up to this time points to unreliability on the part of Blixt. Of course I know all about it—know something about the man and am Aware of His Capabilities.

It will take the public and this court a good deal of time to obtain the same amount of information that I could give on the subject."

"How do you feel about the outlook, Hayward—as far as the case has gone?"

"Feel? why I feel splendidly. The matter is bound to come out all right, it seems to me. Nothing has yet been introduced that conflicts with the statement I made as to my knowledge of this affair when it occurred. Oh, yes, I am perfectly satisfied with the condition of the case."

The Charity Ball.

The charity ball and cake walk, at McKinnon's hall on Friday evening netted over $100 for the poor of the city. Harry Walker and Miss Pearl Glassford took the cake—when you come to know that Charlie Misner made Harry's wig from genuine African wool—"combings," it is no wonder that Harry took the cake—the wonder is he didn't take the whole bakery. The cake, as soon as won was raffled off and that process was repeated several times until the cake brought almost its weight in gold. After the "culled people" had finished their part of the program "the poor white trash" got a "chance at the Flure" and the fun was fast and furious until the wee sma' hours. Everybody declared that it was the finest time they had had this winter and are just aching for another charitable opportunity.

TALKING ON THE AIR

RECORD FOR LONG DISTANCE CONVERSATION WITHOUT A WIRE.

How Carlotta Got an Amateur Balloonist Out of a Fix a Mile Up In the Air—Her Voice Reached Over Four Miles—Gasbags Acted as Receivers.

Tales are plenty of long distances over which men's voices have been conveyed by the medium of placid water. An Adirondack guide tells of having talked in ordinary tones, on a very still day, with a companion 1½ miles distant at the other end of a lake, and another guide caps this story with one of yells which were heard and returned near a water extent of three miles. These tales are quite outdone by a well authenticated story told by Carlotta, once the most famous woman balloonist in the world. In her story air, instead of water, was the medium, and the distance of the conversation was four miles. It took place above the outskirts of St Louis some years ago.

"It was an aeronautic exhibition," says Carlotta in telling the story, "and a young man named White, who was inexperienced in ballooning, had agreed to make an ascension. I had already gone up and was quietly drifting east on an easy air current when he started out. He had had enough experience to know how to handle the valves and sandbags, and he intended to go up a mile or so and then descend easily. Now the upper air is full of varying currents. You may be going due west at a half a mile altitude, and when you get up a few hundred yards farther you may strike a current that carries you due east. Mr. White checked his upward career in a west bound draft, so that when he finally drifted out of that current into mine we were a good long distance apart.

"I always have a powerful glass with me when I make an ascension. When I turned this on him, I saw that he was in trouble. His balloon had twisted a little in such a way that I judged it was likely to twist more, and he was clambering around the ropes trying to right it, but without much apparent conception of what was best to do. I was frightened for him, for when the bag of a balloon turns too much the gas begins to escape rapidly, and the results are likely to be serious. I knew that voices could be heard a long way in the air, for I had often heard people a mile below me shouting, so without knowing how far the two balloons were apart I decided to hail the other one. I gathered all my breath and shouted:

"'Hello, hello, hello!'

"Then I turned my glass on the other balloon again. Up where the air is so clear as it is a mile above the earth one can see at great distances with wonderful distinctness. Through my glass I could see Mr. White start and look all around him. That was quite a while after I had shouted. He didn't seem to understand where the voice came from, but finally I saw him put his hands to his mouth, evidently making a speaking trumpet of them. I waited and waited and was just about to shout again when the huge gasbag above me began to thrill with sounds. They seemed to buzz along its sides and diffuse the air, only to collect and come whirring and rumbling down the funnel to be poured into my ears, and they formed in a tone that seemed made up of a million other tones:

"'Hello! Where—are—you?'

"It was the most peculiar sound I had ever heard. When it had scattered itself into silence, I took out my watch, and timing myself shouted:

"'Throw out one sandbag. I'll come to you!'

"Forty seconds later my balloon began to vibrate again, finally forming the words:

"'All right. In trouble!'

"There was method in my telling him to throw out the sandbag, as it was afterward of use. I threw out a number myself, for I reckoned that a little above me I would find a current to carry me toward Mr. White. This I did and was soon within a short distance of him, nerinlly considered. The trouble with his balloon was a slight disarrangement of the ropes, which I had myself experienced, so I told him what to do, and he was soon all right. As I explained to him when we reached the earth, we had been talking over an aerial telephone, the gasbags being the only material objects up there collecting all the sounds and acting as huge receivers."

"'Well,' said he, 'you got me out of a very bad scrape, but I never was so scared in my life as when that voice surrounded me. I thought the balloon was talking, and that I had gone crazy.'

"'It was a pretty long talk,' said I, 'for, allowing the voice to travel five seconds to a mile by my timing, we must have been close to four miles apart.'

"'That's simply impossible,' said he.

"'Very well,' I said. 'That's why I told you to drop that sandbag. I threw some out, too, and we can find out how far they landed apart.'

"It wasn't much trouble to find people who had found the bags and knew just where they were. Fortunately they had landed near a railroad track, so the distance estimating was made easy for us. It was 4¼ miles. I guess that is the record up to date for long distance talking without a wire."

His Names.

A pair of twins was born in the Back Bay district. A bright boy set about to try to name them. He said, "Will they be called Peter and Repeater?" But no. His mother would not listen to the name Peter. Then he said, "Let them be called Max and Climax."

"No," she said. "They are both little girls, so we cannot name one of them Max."

Then he said after much thought, "Let them be called Kate and Duplicate." After that his head was bandaged, and he was sent out to play.—Union Signal.

Utica's Unique Tollgate.

Utica enjoys the doubtful distinction of being probably the only city in the United States which has a tollgate within its boundaries or anywhere near it, for that matter. The old days of toll roads and tollgates have passed away, and it is well that they have. The company which maintains the Deerfield gate has a legal status that cannot be done away with without the consent of those who own the property. The last legislature passed an enabling act which makes it possible for the parties interested to do away with the tollgate, and it is something to which the attention of the authorities may properly be directed.—Utica Press.

My Wife is Nervous

Says many a man and too often he is inclined to blame the poor, tired woman who cannot eat or sleep, whose whole life is filled with misery because her blood has become impoverished and her nervous system exhausted. She needs a building up medicine like Hood's Sarsaparilla. A few bottles will enrich and vitalize her blood, tone and strengthen her digestive organs, give her a good appetite, enable her to sleep soundly, banish her nervousness and bring back her smiles. Mr. J. W. Roberson, of Greenfield, Tenn., says: "My wife began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla about three months ago and she is now taking her third bottle. She has been in poor health for fifteen years. Hood's Sarsaparilla is doing her more good than any other medicine she has ever taken. Her appetite is better, she looks better and there has been improvement in every way."

CHAPTER I.

OPENING OF A CAMPAIGN.

The Army of the Cumberland is awakening. For months its 30 miles of torpid length have been marked by clusters of white tents like the rings of a gigantic anaconda. But now there is an arousing from its long period of lethargy. The tents are being struck, the men are stuffing knapsacks, rolling blankets or swallowing from tin cups a last draft of invigorating coffee. Wagons are being loaded with all kinds of camp equipage—tents, camp cots, cooking utensils, the pine tables and army desks of the staff departments. Here orderlies are holding horses, waiting their riders, and there men are strapping blankets or ponchos behind saddles or cramming bacon and "hard tack" into haversacks, while strikers empty the contents of the demijohn into canteens. Each regiment as soon as formed moves out into the road, the whole taking up the line of march by brigades and divisions.

It is the right or head of the monster that awakens first. The main body of this wing moves diagonally toward the front and left, while cavalry pushes directly south to conceal the movement and produce a false impression on the enemy. All day the infantry and artillery work their way over dirt roads, the men marching at will, smoking, chatting, laughing, the Irish regiments cracking jokes, the Germans singing, all with that esprit which pervades an army just starting after a long period of idleness on a new campaign. A lashing of artillery horses, a cursing of mules, words of command, bugle calls, picket firing, the occasional boom of a gun, mingle confusedly and in a country used only to the peaceful lowing of cattle or the song of birds. Throughout its whole length the Army of the Cumberland is in motion, advancing on that campaign which is to maneuver the Confederates out of Tennessee and lead up to the battle of Chickamauga.

On a road running parallel with the Cumberland mountains, which flank the Union army on its left, a strange looking vehicle is going at a breakneck pace toward the south. The horse is a rawboned animal with long legs and neck, while the vehicle—a buggy—is so bespattered with mud that what paint remains on it is invisible. The bottom is partly gone; the dashboard would let through a cannon ball without being injured; the springs are badly bent; the top, which is let down—there are no props to hold it up—is shriveled and torn, its tatters flying behind in the wind. A woman in a striped calico dress, a sunbonnet of the same material, a pair of colored spectacles on her nose, holds the reins and urges forward the horse. Yet strange looking as is the conveyance and its occupant, for that time and region there is nothing unusual in the appearance of either. The country people inhabiting that portion of Tennessee are not cultured, and uncouthness is rather the rule than the exception.

Coming to a place where she can get a full view for some distance ahead, the woman glances over the intervening space between her and the next rise in the undulating ground. Seeing nothing to deter, she drives her horse on as rapidly as she can force him to go. Her buggy careens till it is in danger of going over; she is bounced from her seat with a prospect of being sent over the dashboard; the mud flies, the horse wheezes, the buggy groans, but there is no slackening of pace.

"Go on, Bobby, go on!"

Turning a curve in the road partly hidden by trees, she sees a cavalry camp ahead. In the road an officer stands talking to a man in a farm wagon, beside whom, on a board seat, its two ends resting on the wagon's sides, sits a boy of 14, while on a back seat, evidently borrowed from a more pretentious vehicle, is a young girl, perhaps three or four years the boy's senior.

The woman of the striped dress drove up to the group, and drawing rein listened to what they were saying.

"Cap," said the farmer—all officers in the Union army were called by the people of the country either cap or gineral or mister—"cap, I want ter go through the lines powerful bad."

"Well, Oi'm thinkin, me good man," replied the officer, with the brogue of an Irishman, "that's exactly what old Rosy wants to do unless he prefers to get behind 'em and bag 'em from the rear."

"Oh, I don't mean fightin! I wants ter go hum peaceful."

"Can't pass ye, me good man. Oi've orders not to pass any one south while the army is movin. There's no need to be tellin ye that all day. Once ought to be sufficient."

"What's thet?" cried a shrill voice from the buggy. "You don't mean fo' ter tell me I can't go hum?"

"Oi fear, me dear leddy, that ye can't, if ye live beyond our lines."

"H'm! And so you uns hev kem down hyar ter make war on women."

"Well, now, that depends on the kind of war. We've come down vi et armis, as my old preceptor at the university used to say—God bless 'im! Like enough the vi is for the men and the armis for the women."

"I don't keer," replied the woman. "You uns hain't got no business fo' ter come down hyar nohow. You're a mis'able set o' black abolishioners. I'm a gal 'thout nothin ter fight with, and you uns"—

"Beauty and the beast," interrupted the officer, bowing.

"Now, see hyar, Mr. Yank, I got ter go hum. Pop he's away, and mother she's sick in bed."

The officer scratched his head and thought.

"Well, me friends," he said presently, "Oi'm thinkin Oi'll refer the case of all of yez to brigade headquarters. Would ye moind sittin where ye are till I get an answer?"

"Reckon not," from the farmer.

"Hurry up," said the woman in the buggy. "Mother's waitin fo' me."

The officer stepped into his tent near by and came out with a pencil and the back of an old letter. With these he proceeded to take down the information required. Approaching the buggy, he said:

"Will ye plaze favor me with your patronymic"—he paused while he looked to see if she were young or old—"miss?"

"My what?"

"Your patronymic."

"Oh, talk Tennessee!"

"Well, then, your cognomen."

"See hyar, Mr. Officer, ef you want ter git anything outen me, you want to talk squar'."

"Please tell me your name."

"Betsy Baggs. And yours?"

"Major Burke, at your service. Are ye Union or"—

"Rebel!"

"Where do ye want to go?"

"Hum."

"And that is at"—

"Dunlap."

"Why are ye here?"

"I been ter MacMinnville ter see mother's old doctor."

"There's a shorter road from MacMinnville than this. Why didn't ye take it?"

The girl showed a slight confusion.

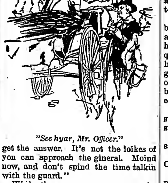
"Oh, I got a friend at Franklin college. She uns and I uns allus ben powerful thick."

After getting the data as to all the party the major called a mounted man and directed him to take it to headquarters and ask for instructions.

"Do ye know who to take it to?" he asked of the man as he was about to ride away.

"It's to the gineral I'm takin it."

"The gineral? Man, would you get me court martialed for disregard of the regulations? Take it to the chafe of staff, ye lunkhead, and from him ye'll get the answer. It's not the loikes of you can approach the gineral. Moind now, and don't spind the time talkin with the guard."



"See hyar, Mr. Officer."

While the messenger was away the party listened to the voluble tongue of the young Confederate sympathizer in the buggy. She entered into the causes of the war, depicted the benefits of negro slavery, especially on the slave, spoke admiringly of all Confederate soldiers and ransacked the dictionary to find words to express her loathing of Yankees.

"Come, now, Miss Baggs," said the major good naturedly. "There's a young fellow in me regiment who'll suit ye exactly. He is an Oirishman from the crown of his head to the sole of his fut. He only came over a few years ago. He is as smart as a whip. There was but one gurrel in County Cavan who could outtalk 'im. That's the reason he left Oireland."

"When I want a man, I reckon I can find one right hyar outen the yarth o' Tennessee 'thout goin to Oireland ter find one. Is he redheaded?"

"Red as the linin of an artillery officer's cap."

"What kind o' eyes?"

"Blue as a robin's egg."

"Waal, trot him out. I'll take a look at him."

"Oi'll call him meself," and the major went into one of the tents. There he found Corporal Ratigan, the man he sought.

"Corporal Rats," he said—every one called the corporal Rats—"there's a gurrel out there that wants to go through the lines. Oi've sent to brigade headquarters to find out if they'll give her a pass. I want ye to make her acquaintance."

"At your service, major," said the corporal, saluting. And the two walked out to where the travelers were waiting.

"Miss Baggs," said the major, "allow me to present Corporal Ratigan, commonly called Rats by his comrades, one of the most gallant men in the regiment."

Corporal Ratigan bowed and uncovered a head of hair fully up to the major's description of it. It surmounted one of the most honest of countenances. There was an air of gentility about the man despite his private's uniform, and the smile with which he greeted the young woman could not have been more bewitching had he saluted a marchioness. Admiration for the strapping Irish Yankee soldier stood big in Miss Baggs' eyes.

"How de?" she said, with something that was intended for a bow. "Yer a purty likely lookin feller ef you air playin Yank. You'd better 'a' staid in Oireland than come down hyar ter make war on women."

"And have Oi overpainted the beautiful tint of his hair?" asked the major, laughing. "It'd make good winter hair; needn't hev no fire in the house."

Horses' hoofs were heard down the road, and in a few minutes the messenger who had been sent to headquarters rode up.

"Where's the answer?" asked the major.

"Divil an answer did Oi get, major," said the man, saluting awkwardly.

"And what d'ye mean by that?"

"Well, Oi kem up to headquarthers, and the gineral was gettin off of his harse to go in his tint. 'Have ye anythin for me, me man?' he asked. 'Niver a worrud, gineral,' Oi answered, salutin respectful. 'What's the paper ye have in your belt?' 'It's for the chafe of staff.' 'Well, give it to me.' 'Divil a bit, gineral; it's not for the loikes of me to be givin yez a paper. Oi'm instructed to give it to the chafe of staff.' 'Give me the paper, ye cussed Oirishman,' he said, 'or Oi'll sind ye to the guard tint.' 'Niver will Oi be guilty of breakin the regulations or the articles of war, gineral.' 'Corporal of the guard!' yelled the gineral.

"The corporal kem and saluted the gineral, him red as Corporal Ratigan's head. 'Take that paper from that man!' he roared. Well, bein surrounded by the guard who were at the corporal's call, Oi surrendered."

"And thin?" gasped the major, glaring at the stupid messenger.

"And thin the gineral said, 'Go to yer camp and tell Major Burke to put ye in the guard tint for 24 hours. And whin he sinds another orderly to me not to sind a recruit, or Oi'll put him in arrest.'"

"By the howly ——! Ye infernal, raw ——! Did ye get no answer?"

"'Oi'll sind an answer by a soldier who has been properly retained,' said the gineral. Didn't ye tell me right, major?"

"Corporal of the guard!" cried the major by way of reply.

"Take that man," he said when the corporal came, "to the guard tent."

As the messenger was marched away, protesting against the injustice of his treatment for obeying orders, a staff officer rode up. Taking the major apart, he instructed him to let the applicants go through, provided they would take an oath not to give any information concerning the Union troops to the enemy. With the passes he brought a suggestion from the general to send some person with one or the other of the two parties under pretense of an escort, but really with a view to discovering the proximity of the enemy. Now that the main army was moving, it might be well to discover if the cavalry on its flank had fallen back. The ground was unfavorable for a reconnoissance; hence the suggestion to get information by strategem.

The major hunted the camp for a Bible on which to administer the oath and called on Corporal Ratigan to help him. He explained the general's request and told Ratigan that he wanted him to go with Miss Baggs. Having given the corporal a full understanding of what was required of him, he went back to the party with a Bible, followed by Ratigan.

The farmer and his family were first sworn, and then the major offered to swear Miss Baggs.

"I hain't goin ter do no swearin," she said defiantly.

"Oi'm glad to hear that," remarked Corporal Ratigan.

"What fo', fire top?" she asked, surprised.

"Oi'd be breakin me heart at partin with ye."

"You hain't got no heart nohow, or you wouldn't be in the Yankee army."

"Don't ye believe it," exclaimed the major; "his heart's as warrum as the color of his hair. Come, young leddy, take the oath. Oi'd be sorry to be partin ye from yer mother and she sufferin."

"I won't."

"Won't ye take it for moi sake?" queried Ratigan, with a mock appeal.

"You'll hev ter git some un uglier'n you uns ter move me. I hanker after ugly men, but you uns ain't quite ugly enough fo' me."

"Now ye're talkin with a seductive tongue," quoth Ratigan. "If the major will permit, Oi've a mind to see ye through the lines meself without the oath."

The corporal looked slyly at the major, and the major returned the corporal's sly glance.

"Very well," said Burke. "Ye go with her, and moind that she isn't keepin her ois open to see things for Gineral Bragg's benefit. Miss Baggs, if ye'll just keep lookin roit into the corporal's blue orbs, ye'll get through all right, and if ye're tempted to look aside just fix 'em on his head, and ye'll be blinded."

The corporal went for his horse, buckled on his revolver, and coming back started out to play diplomat—in other words, to acquire knowledge by strategy.

CHAPTER II.

A WAR OF WITS.

Corporal Ratigan rode gallantly beside Miss Baggs, the two keeping up a constant picket firing, which occasionally warmed to the dignity of a skirmish. Miss Baggs was in an excellent humor and the corporal quite delighted at the role he was playing. He pretended to watch her carefully whenever anything belonging to the army was passed on the road, while he was secretly forming his plans for getting far enough on the way to determine the proximity of the enemy. He felt no suspicion as to Miss Baggs carrying information. Being on the flank of the army, she would not be likely to have much information to carry. The country people were constantly passing between the lines, and considering their harrowing excuses no one except with a heart of stone could well prevent them.

"What's in the box ye have with ye?" asked Ratigan, looking at a square little box on the seat beside her. It had been covered with a shawl, which had fallen from over it, exposing it to view.

"Thet? Thet's a philosophy machine. You see, my friend, Sal Glassick, she knows a heap o' things. She's tryin ter beat some on 'em inter my pore noddle. Reckon she won't hev no easy time."

"What branch does she teach ye with that?"

"Waal, you see, mother, she's sufferin with palsy, and this hyar box is a—waal, Sal, she calls it a gal—gal"—

"Galvanic battery?"

"Thet's it. You hit it right thar. A galvanic battery. We uns 're goin ter try 't on mother. Lord a-massy, what's thet?"

She directed his attention from the box to a cloud of smoke hanging over the gaps in the hills far to the west. They were crossing a mountain spur and could see it quite plainly.

"There's foightin goin on there," remarked the corporal.

"And you uns air gittin licked," observed the rebellious Miss Baggs.

"How d'ye know that?" asked Ratigan, surprised that she should know anything about it.

"Oh, I reckon!"

"It's a quare thing—the reckonin of gurrels."

"Waal, you see, women hain't got the big heads men hev. They can't reason things out. They hev ter jump at 'em mebbe, like ants. Ants is powerful small, but they're most times right when they reckon."

Ratigan made no reply. He was thinking that Miss Baggs did not appear to be so plain a personage as he at first thought her. He looked at her hands, incased in coarse gloves, and noticed that they were small for "poor white trash."

Her attire was very cheap, and her cowhide shoes did not betoken refinement, but somehow he began to gather a notion that Miss Baggs was not so dreadfully common as she appeared. The corporal came of an excellent family in his native land, and under ordinary circumstances could detect refinement. He looked for Miss Baggs to use some expression beyond the ken of a "poor white" girl, but she did not. So he dismissed the matter from his mind and began to wonder what excuse he could make to go on with her under flag of truce when she should pass the Union pickets.

"We uns air goin slow enough ter worrit a snail," remarked Miss Baggs.

"And why should we be goin faster?"

"Whar'd you steal thet critter?" she asked, instead of replying, looking sidewise at the corporal's mount. "It's likely nuff fo' Tennessee blood."

"Oh! That's United States. Don't ye see the 'U. S.' branded on him?"

"Can he trot?"

"He can beat anything in the brigade."

"D'you think he can trot with this hyar critter o' mine."

Ratigan looked at her rawboned brute and burst into a laugh.

"Waal, now, you needn't take on so. Reckon I o'd give you a brush ef you was minded."

"All right, me dear. Here's a straight bit of road."

"Fo' what stakes?"

"A $5 greenback."

"Agin Confederate money?"

"With pleasure."

The corporal drew forth a crisp $5 bill. And Miss Baggs put the thumb and finger of one hand in the palm of the other under her glove and drew out a Confederate shinplaster.

"Who holds the stakes?" asked the corporal gleefully.

"You uns."

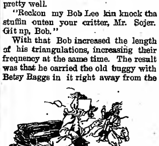
"Divil a bit. The lady shall hold 'em."

She took the bill he handed her and gave the lines a jerk with a "Git along thar! Remember, it's a trottin race."

Ratigan was at a disadvantage from the first. He did not dare to use his spurs lest his horse should break from a trot. Miss Baggs' animal began to reach his lank legs out, triangulating in a lumbering fashion that put him over the ground at no inconsiderable speed. The corporal did his best and kept pace pretty well.

"Reckon my Bob Lee kin knock the stuffin outen your critter, Mr. Sojer. Git up, Bob."

With that Bob increased the length of his triangulations, increasing their frequency at the same time. The result was that he carried the old buggy with Betsy Baggs in it right away from the corporal. Indeed Ratigan fell behind steadily. If he should break from a trot, he would lose the race; if he should keep up his trot, he would lose Miss Baggs.



He gave his horse the spur.

Suddenly an officer appeared on the road, and regarding him sternly ordered him to halt.

"Oi'm followin the young lady, sir. Oi'm on official business for the gineral, commanding the ——th cavalry brigade."

"Well, my man, you're a well disciplined orderly. You keep the regulation 40 paces to the rear. Give your horse the spur and catch up."

Ratigan, who could not well explain to an officer that he was running a race, and fearing to lose his charge, gave his horse the spur and dashed after her at a gallop. He reached her in a "blown" condition.

"Oi've lost," he cried out of breath.

"Reckon you have," was Miss Baggs' sole reply.

"The money's yours."

"Reckon it air," repeated Miss Baggs.

"Yer always reckonin. Mebbe ye reckoned about the end of the race loike the ant ye were talkin about."

At that moment they spied the outpost ahead.

"Waal, hyar we air," said Miss Baggs. "Don't want ter part from you uns, Mr. Sojer. I'm powerful bad struck hyar." And she put her hand on her heart.

"Like enough Oi can find some reason to go with ye a bit. Oi'm all broken up meself, sure enough."

"I hopes you kin."

"Lieutenant," said the corporal, saluting an officer who came out from the picket post. "Major Burke ordered me to see this young lady out of the lines. She has a pass to Dunlap."

The lieutenant read the pass and told Miss Baggs she might go through.

Ratigan was racking his brains to know what to do. He had been instructed to go through with Miss Baggs under some pretense, but his ingenuity when put to the test failed him. Miss Baggs came to his relief.

"Mr. Corporal," she said, "I don't hanker ter part 'ith thet bloomin head o' ha'r o' yourn. Would you mind seein a pore lone woman ter the Confederate lines?"

The corporal whispered a few words in the lieutenant's ear. The result was that in five minutes four cavalry privates were placed under the corporal's orders, who held in his hand a pole cut from a tree at the side of the road, to which he had attached a white cotton handkerchief.

Then the old buggy, which rattled at every turn of the wheel and threatened to collapse at every mudhole, proceeded down the road. Corporal Ratigan cantered alongside, while the four privates followed directly in rear.

But a few miles had been traversed when a horseman—he proved to be the enemy's vedette—was seen standing in the road ahead. As the party approached they saw a dozen more advancing to his support. But the Confederates evidently saw the white flag, for no other demonstration was made than the riding forward of an officer with half a dozen men to meet those who were advancing.

"What do you want?" asked the officer gruffly.

"Flag to see the lady to your lines."

"Under a commissioned officer?"

"Only meself, a corporal," said Ratigan.

"Well, you can turn about pretty quick and get back to where you came from. The next such flag sent out will be taken in and won't get out again."

"Captain, don't you know me?" said Miss Baggs, smiling at the officer.

"Well, upon my word. You don't mean"—

Miss Baggs put her finger on her lip.

"These men came at my request," she continued, "so I hope you will not find any fault."

The officer raised his hat, but said nothing.

"Good morning, corporal," she said. "I'm much obliged for your trouble."

"You're quite welcome, miss."

Both parties moved slowly away simultaneously. They had scarcely started before the corporal heard his name spoken in a woman's voice, but one with which he was not familiar.

"Rats!"

He turned and saw what must be Miss Baggs, for her dress was the same, though her head and neck were changed, standing in the buggy, her back to the horse, her face directly toward him. Her glasses were gone, her sunbonnet hung in one hand, while she held reins in the other. Never had the corporal beheld so great a change in so brief a space of time. The jolting had disarranged a mass of dark hair which had partly fallen over her shoulders. Her eyes were black and lustrous, her complexion an olive relieved by a ruddiness on the cheek. Her superb head was set on her neck as if it had been placed there by an artist. The face was lighted by a smile of triumph—a smile so bewitching that it haunted the corporal to his dying day.

Ratigan had not recovered from his surprise before she spoke to him in a rich contralto voice, as little like that he had heard from her as a fife is like the mellow tones of an organ.

"Corporal, please present my compliments to Major Burke and thank him for me for his kindness, and tell him that when he sends another woman through the lines under pretense of keeping her eyes shut, when he has an especial purpose of his own in view, not to send an 'Oirishman' for an escort." The smile on her lips broadened and showed a set of white teeth. "The 'Oirish' race as diplomats are not usually successful. Au revoir, corporal."

There was a grin on the faces of the Confederate lookers on and astonishment on the honest countenance of Corporal Ratigan.

"And, Rats," she continued, evidently enjoying bringing out the word with her rich voice, as one loves to roll old wine on the tongue, "when a woman desires to race, it is not always for the money up." She tossed the bill she had won toward him.

"And, Rats, don't race again with any one with a rawboned animal with long legs. Bobby Lee is from the blue grass regions of Kentucky. There's something wrong about his breathing apparatus, but even with that disadvantage he can trot a mile over a good road in 2:50."

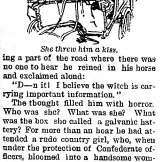
Had Miss Baggs appeared less bewitching as she stood there under the protection of half a dozen Confederate troopers, Ratigan would have turned away impatiently. As it was, she seemed to hold him by a spell.

"One thing more, my bonny cardinal flower. Tell the major that I like 'the young man from County Cavan' he has recommended to me very much." Her eyes fairly danced. "When the war is over, I hope you will look me up. Inquire for Betsy Baggs at the St. Cloud hotel, Nashville."

With this she threw him a kiss from the tips of her fingers, which, now that her glove was removed, he noticed were white and round. There was really something sympathetic in the last glance she gave him. In it was a regret that it had been necessary for her to deceive so honest and manly a fellow. It was the final dart that pierced the Irishman's heart and completed his inthrallment.

Leaving the corporal and his men gaping in the road, the party moved away. The last thing Ratigan heard was a hoarse laugh from one of the Confederates, which was rebuked by Miss Baggs and reprimanded by the officer.

The corporal led his party northward in no good humor. At the picket post he left the men he had taken with him and rode on alone meditatively. In passing a part of the road where there was no one to hear he reined in his horse and exclaimed aloud:



She threw him a kiss.

"D—n it! I believe the witch is carrying important information."

The thought filled him with horror. Who was she? What was she? What was the box she called a galvanic battery? For more than an hour he had attended a rude country girl, who, when under the protection of Confederate officers, bloomed into a handsome woman. He was as much chagrined at his own stupidity as he was bewildered by the cunning of Miss Baggs.

Entering the camp, he slunk away to his tent and did not report the outcome of his mission to Major Burke till just before "taps." Then he only said, "Their pickets are three miles down the road beyond ours."

"Are ye shure?"

"Oi am. Oi left the young lady—Oi mean the counthry gurrel—among 'em. And the vixen blew me a kiss at partin."

"Ah, Rats, ye're a sly dog. Oi'm shure ye did your work well."

"Major," replied the corporal, "don't ye believe it. All the divils in hell if they be men are no match for a woman."

"And if they be women, Rats?"

"Then God save 'em both."

A Lewiston family, which traces its ancestry back beyond the Revolution, owns an old coat which is supposed to have been worn by a major in the colonial army, and which is stained by his blood. This coat hangs in a showcase in the hall, among other curiosities, and the family have for 50 years pointed to the yellow stain with pride. The other day a peddler came to the door and was left standing in the hall to await the lady's pleasure in seeing him. He sold some kind of infallible soap to remove stains, and seeing the coat and its honored stain he thought to please the owner by removing the discolor.

"You see, madam, that this soap is sure to remove stains of all kinds," he said when she appeared, and he pointed to the coat.

He did not sell any soap there.—Lewiston Journal.

"No, I don't want it cut, and I don't want it trimmed," snarled the shaggy haired young man, seating himself in the chair and glaring savagely at the barber, "and I'm not a football player nor a pianist, and I haven't taken any vow not to have it cut. Perhaps that will save you the trouble of asking questions. All I want is a shave."

"Yes, sir."

The barber worked in silence for ten minutes.

"Is there any history attached to this ragged old hat?" asked the visitor. "It looks as if it had been in a powder mill explosion."

"No, it belonged to a Russian general," said the museum owner.

"Oh! And he tried to talk through it, eh?"—Cincinnati Tribune.

THE growl that the Minneapolis papers set up about Nelson's using the appointments as a leverage to accomplish his purposes in the recent senatorial contest loses its point when you consider that Governor Nelson reappointed nearly all of the old incumbents.

THE disgraceful attack made by W. C. P. Breckinridge upon the Missouri member of the House, Mr. Heard, last week, is a relic of the old spirit of intolerance that the southern members used to manifest "befo the wah," but which has not been quite so numerous since. The old man has fallen very low.

IN the case known as the Steenerson rate case, on trial in the Supreme court last week, we notice that the firm of Davis, Severance & Kellogg appears for the Northern Pacific railroad, which road seeks to come in as intervenor. This certainly does not look well for Senator C. K. Davis, who claims to be a great friend to the common, every-day people. It will not do to say that because he is in Washington he is not in it. His firm would hardly undertake a case he did not sanction.

On Thursday Jan. 31st Governor Nelson resigned and Lieut. Gov. Clough was immediately sworn in as governor. D. M. Clough is pre-eminently a man of the people, having worked his way up to the position he now fills from the ranks of the laboring man. Notwithstanding the howls of a few disappointed Minneapolis newspaper men Dave Clough will be found a worthy successor to Knute Nelson. Governor Clough retains the same private secretary and office staff that Governor Nelson had.

The City Bonds.

The JOURNAL is informed that there are those who are fighting the proposed issue of the city bonds and using as an argument against the issue that the taxes will be higher if the bonds issue. If there are any persons so very thoughtless that they would be caught by such chaff they can soon be convinced of the fallacy of such reasoning by looking into the matter. They will there find that the issue will prevent an immediate increase of taxes for the city has to pay that $10,000 at once and if the bonds do not carry the money must be raised by taxation and of course that will make taxes that much higher. In the meantime, the city is liable to have judgments rendered against her which with the interest and costs will make the sum to be paid very much greater. It does not seem possible that any one can take a different view of this matter yet the JOURNAL has it on good authority that some are already working hard to defeat the issue of the bonds. It would be an extremely short-sighted policy to defeat them at this time.

Novelties In Evening Toilettes

Now that the season of social gatherings, balls and theatre parties has fairly set in, every woman's interest is once more centered on the appropriate evening toilettes. The bodice is a mass of some filmy fabrics, the ultra-fashionable ones—irrespective of skirt made of another material—being invariable of crepon or embroidered mousline de soie, made over a foundation of silk which, in color, matches the skirt. Rosettes of lace usually finish the bodice. Jewelled corselets are very popular. They have a silk foundation and are frequently set with real gems. The crepes afford an opportunity for producing, at a moderate price, very artistics effects. They come in all tints. The ribboned crepe is a very dainty novelty. Sleeves remain as wonderful as ever in size, They are of the same fabric as the skirt. As for the latter, it is conspicuous for its plainness and its pronounced flare. A great variety of models are to be found in McDowell Fashion Magazines. These unequalled periodicals offer an inducement in the way of special coupon patterns which always follow the latest, the most fashionable and the most practical styles. Both "La Mode de Paris" and "Paris Album of Fashion," cost $3.50 per year, or 35 cents a copy; "The French Dressmaker" is $3.00 per annum, or 30 cts. a copy. As for "La Mode" it costs only $1.50 a year, or 15 cents a copy. If you are unable to procure either of these journals of your newsdealer do not take any substitute from him, but apply by mail directly to Messrs. McDowell & Co., 4 West 14th Street, New York.

LATE LITERARY NEWS.

General Lord Wolseley makes a most important contribution to the China-Japan war. In an article for the February Cosmopolitan, he discusses the situation and does not mince matters in saying what China must do in this emergency. Two other noted foreign authors contribute interesting articles to this number. Rosita Mauri, the famous Parisian danseuse, gives the history of the ballet, and Emile Ollivier tells the story of the fall of Louis Philippe. From every part of the world, drawings and photographs have been obtained of the instruments used to torture poor humanity, and appear as illustration for a clever article, by Julian Hawthorne, entitled, "Salvation via the Rack." Mrs. Reginald de Koven, Anatole France, W. Clark Russell, Albion W. Tourgee, and William Dean Howells are among the story tellers for the February number of The Cosmopolitan.

WHO WOULD'T BE A PAUPER?

The farmers are all "paupers," the Populists say. But a careful government investigation shows that the farmers have some 625,000,000 acres of farms, worth over $13,000,000,000, as compared with 294,000,000 acres, worth $3,271,000,000 in 1850.

LITERARY NOTES.

"The Progress of the World," in the Review of Reviews for February, commenting on the recent sudden change in the Presidency of the French Republic, suggests as a desirable improvement in the French system the separation of the legislative and the exective department of government. The editor of the Review, in the same department, discusses recent events in Hawaii and Japan, the condition of Armenia, the troubles in Newfoundland, and many topics of world-wide interest. In the field of English politics, such subjects as the revenue returns, the London municipal elections, and the fortunes of the Liberal party are treated, with Continental affairs of the day receive due consideration. On the American side, the editor presents a timely summary of the present condition of the national treasury and the demands that some means to secure revenue be devised by Congress before a plan of currency is permanently adopted; the changes in the composition of the Senate are noted, and State and municipal matters receive attention; numerous portraits accompany the crisp editorial paragraphs of which "The Progess of the world" is made up.

Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucuous lining of the Eustachian tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

THE BIBLE'S FRIEND

Archbishop Ireland Would Defend the Good Book With His Life.

People of the Bob Ingersoll Stripe Severely Rebuked in a Public Address.

Fully 2,500 people assembled at the Church of the Immaculate Conception to hear Archbishop John Ireland's reply to Robert Ingersoll's latest attack. "The Bible, What It Is and What It Has Done," was the subject of the eminent prelate's discourse. Eloquent, scholarly, logical, masterful, convincing are terms that most fittingly characterize this, one of the most powerful sermons ever delivered from a Minneapolis pulpit and one of the most scathing rebukes ever administered to the teachings of the greatest agnostic of the present century.

Among the congregation assembled were members of every sect and denomination in the city—pastors, laymen, educators and scholars all drawn thither by the force of a man whose eloquent discourses breath no less the spirit of loyal devotion to his church than do they to all that is liberal, broad-minded, patriotic and Christian. Seats had been reserved and were occupied by a large number of university students, and long before the service began the nave, transepts and gallery of the church were filled to overflowing, until at last it was difficult to obtain even standing room. After an impressive musical service and the invocation by the pastor, Fr. Keene, Archbishop Ireland stepped to the front of the platform and in clear, penetrating tones, vibrating with the most intense earnestness, delivered his address, of which the following is a comprehensive synopsis:

The Bible! My soul goes out to it in love, gratitude, reverence, worship. It is, indeed, the Bible—the book of books. The voice of the Great Master of the universe speaks to me through its pages; the light, illumining the religious and moral world, radiates from His own divine face; the sweetness which it distils is the tenderness of His own fatherhood. Written in it are my hopes for time and eternity. It is God's message to me telling of my maker and my relations to Him, marking my road to bliss, sustaining me on the earth in trial and suffering, until the goal beyond heaven's portals is reached. They who do insult the Bible, insult what is best in me and dearest to me; they insult my aspirations and my hopes; they insult my God, and I were a traitor to myself and to Him were I not ready to defend it, even to the sacrifice of my life.

In speaking mine I have spoken of your profession of faith, my Christian brethren, and as we take the Bible, so does world wide Christendom take it; so have Christendom and the world taken it for two decades of centuries.

The Bible is in possession; Christendom is its kingdom; Christian civilization is its flower and fruitage. Back of it rise the centuries giving to it plenary loyalty and receiving from it their highest thoughts and their most sacred affections. The Bible imposes itself with all the weight of Christian history and Christian civilization.

The burden of proof rests upon those who contradict the Bible, who deny its authority and power. Clear and potent should be the arguments that could dethrone it from the pedestal of glory where the centuries have placed it.

The enemies of the Bible have been heard. What are their weapons of attack? Denials and assertions. Arguments totally beside the question, misstatements and misconceptions. I give no consideration to loudness and assurance of tone and to vulgar sneer; so apt, however, to catch the attention of the unwary and the weak-minded.

The denial of God and the denial of the Bible go together, the one proceeding from the other. But God is; and a denial of His being is a denial of your own mind, which, if recognized in any measure, compels you to confess God.

This supreme mind is God; and, He living and reigning, the Bible is possible. It purports to be a direct revelation from God to the word of men. Cannot the mind who made the universe and constituted it in the harmonies of law speak to us through manifestations other than the ordinary ones of nature? Is it not, even, an antecedent probability that He will speak to us through manifestations supernatural and extraordinary, since the ordinary ones do not, in matters vital to us, satisfy the questioning of our minds and the thirsting of our hearts? We can never be made to believe that the sky is so leaden that a message from the Ruler of Nature cannot come to us; that the goodness and truth which nature makes us attribute to Him cannot in direct scintillations light and sweeten our dark and desolate souls. God is no guess, and a revelation is no absurdity.

The Bible is a book to be read and believed. Why, it is replete with stories of miracles, and a miracle is impossible. "A miracle is the badge and brand of fraud. No miracle was ever performed. No intelligent, honest man ever pretened to perform a miracle and never will." But miracles are possible, aye, antecedently probable. On what reasonable grounds, we ask, will it be said that the supreme mind from whom all beings in nature receive their energies has no energy of His own, and is impotent at any moment of time to exercise it, to do within his realm what His lowliest subjects may do?

Mere assertions are of no value; cast against the Bible they are pebbles hurled against the walled city, and denote the weakness and rabid hatred of the assailant.

Assertions are easily made; they are as easily denied. The Bible is unhurt by them. The insult offered to hearers, whom these assertions are expected to convince, remains.

There is nothing in books of the Bible, we are told, that suggests the idea of inspiration; there is no way to prove the fact of inspiration of any book and all the books of the Bible. It is the way which we have to prove Christ and His church. The Bible means Christ and the Church; Christ and the Church mean the Bible. The Bible Christ and the Church stand or fall together. You shall not separate any one book of our Bible from the whole Bible, nor the whole Bible from Christ, nor Christ and the Bible from Christ's church. They are together one and the self-same divine dispensation.

"We take the books of the Bible as Christ and His church gave them to us; and on the authority of Christ and His church we accept the books of the Bible as an inspired record of divine revelation. Questions of authorship and dates we deal with on grounds of historical criticism upon which we fear not to enter with the seekers of historic truth, be they believers or unbelievers. Know us for what we are and what we contend for, and the shafts of war will not miss so widely the mark."

Quoting Mr. Ingersoll's own language with reference to the atrocities and crimes in the Old Testament, alleged to have been sanctioned by Jehovah, the archbishop characterizes his statements as "perverse readings of texts so obvious in meaning that misconception of them is criminal," and continues:

The Bible, the book of ages and of Christian civilization, deserves at least to be treated in truthfulness. The Bible unfolds mysteries of heaven, not of earth.

The Bible is a book of religions and moral righteousness; it is not a book of human industry, of science, of finance, of civil government. Is it not the absurdity of absurdities to blame it for not teaching how to cultivate the earth, to build houses, to weave cloth, to construct bridges and ships, to paint pictures and chisel statues? The Bible is not a text book on material progress. Of course, for a materialist and an agnostic there is nothing higher or better than matter, and the book which lifts up towards God and the plane of a heavenly life is to no purpose. But all humanity is not of earth earthly, and there is room among men for a book whispering to us lessons of God and his kingdom. It is an unworthy conception of God to imagine that a revelation from Him will bear on mere material matters, for which nature already furnishes us sufficient equipment.

The Bible is a book of religion and righteous conduct—teaching spiritual truth, imposing precepts, lifting men above passion and sin. The light, however, coming from its successive revelations was progressive in its effulgence. God's revelation was at first as day's early dawn, suiting the weakness of intellect and with gradually becoming brighter as recipient generations were prepared for warmer and more luminous rays until full noon day brilliancy was attained; God's work in spiritual as in the natural life of humanity, was evolutionary. His revealed law was in accordance with men's social condition, which it was continuously lifting upward, without, however, urging it to sudden and irregular leaps. It is asked, was not revelation made full and perfect at once? The answer is, God's wisdom is not of the wisdom of men, fitful, impatient and narrow in its bearings. Eternity belongs to Jehovah, and He works in it as suits His eternal purposes.

View not the deficiencies, which we explain from the social conditions of the Hebrews, but the excellencies of the Old Testament, which are not explained except by the finger of God guiding the people. How did it happen that a small nation without outside power or fame surrounded by pagan and corrupt people, alone preserved monotheism and the worship of pure altars—alone of all the nations of the earth? Because they had the Bible, and Jehovah watched over them. The records of God's dispensation oftentimes goes onward, side by side, with the doings of men. The Old Testament is the story of Israel, of Israel's God and Israel's people, the latter often retreating from the ways of their God, imitating the Gentiles, disobeying their own laws, sinning, repenting, and sinning again. Care must be taken when we begin to criticise that we do not lay to the blame of Jehovah and His inspired Bible the crimes and follies of men, of patriarchs and of kings, which were contrary to Jehovah's will and to the law and spirit of the Bible. This is a frequent mistake of unbelief.

Quoting from the encyclical of the pope on the scripture as to supposed errors of science and history in the Bible and contradictions between narratives of the different writers the speaker said:

Add to these words the fact that the books of the Bible were written long ago, in the ages in which the metaphors and figures of speech are unfamiliar to us, that these books have passed through the hands of an untold number of transcribers and translators, consciously and unconsciously careless in minor matters; add the fact that the Bible embraces all forms of literature, the strict history, the moral instruction, the allegory, and it will be easily seen that careful study and dispassionate judgment are required before sentence can be passed upon it and its true purport proclaimed.

Coming to the defense of the New Testament Archbishop Ireland grew in eloquence as he exclaimed:

And now I pronounce the name, Jesus of Bethlehem and Calvary, and I bow humbly before Him as my Savior and my incarnate God. In defending Him I defend the Bible—the Old Testament, which He made His own, the New, which is the direct record of His preaching—as in defending the Bible I defend Him.

Why cavil over small questions of dates or books, over passages in their recitals? Why demand explanations of every word and omission of friend or foe in contemporary history? See Christ in His work! Whence is he? Whence the power and the wisdom and the virtue which have gone out from Him? On the miracles of Christ, the preaching of the apostles and the conversion of the world I stake my Christian faith, and I fear not the legions of unbelief.

It is easy—to the silly ones it may appear clever—to tell what Christ has not done, enumerating things that he never intended to do, and that a master from heaven would not be expected to do; to make a long record of crimes and mistakes which followers of Christ and the Bible may have been guilty of through centuries, either because they misunderstood Christ or His spirit, or positively disobeying Him, and then to exclaim, "Why is this?" I will tell you why. He was a man and did not know.

Let me put questions to the world. Was there in history ever an ideal of moral perfection offered to men approaching in purity, in elevation, in fruitfulness, to that of Christ and the New Testament? Was there ever in all history a power for good working in any comparable degree as the Christian church, which embodied in her life Christ and the Bible, and brought into full activity the principles of truth and purity given out in the preaching of Christ?

The world has seen 1,900 years of Christian civilization. Its history has its dark spots, for men's free will and passions remain; but it has had its floods of light, of truth and purity, and all that throughout its course is bright and blessed; all that is its pride in the moral life is from Christ. The elevation of woman, the sanctification of the home, the destruction of human slavery, the suppression of brutal despotism in rulers of peoples, the universal freedom of men, the humanity accorded to the weak and the suffering, the softening of feeling in international relations, moral virtues, public and private, all come from Christ. And because without all those high moral gifts to the world men would be incapable of peace and progress, there has come to the world from Christ social happiness, progress in material things, advance in art, in science, and all the refinements of culture and civilization. This is what Christ has done for us.

Scoff then, you who dare, at Jesus and His Bible; scoff at all that is His, at Christendom and Christian civilization; scoff at family regenerated, at womanhood redeemed; scoff at sacramental marriage and holy virginity; scoff at the charity that has peopled the nations with asylums and hospitals; scoff at the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man; scoff at the enfranchised slave; at the most sacred principles of your own American constitution; scoff at Jesus and His Bible.

Where Christ is not there is harbarism; there is servitude of the weak, despotism of the strong, inhumanity and immorality, unbridled and unrebuked by public opinion. Where Christ is not, the family, with pure woman as its queen, is not; sacred matrimony is not. The little of good in a world without Christ comes from imitation of Christian nations, from the introduction into its own body of Christian principles and practices. We will not have such a world.

What will unbelief give us? It replies, a scientific, rational world, beginning with itself and ending with itself. Let us first be consistent, and from this world eliminate what Christian principles and practices it fain would retain. The words most glibly repeated by unbelief, the family, dignity of woman, liberty, fraternity, are Christian words, and without Christianity they would be meaningless. Take them out of your world of unbelief as you give us a scientific world—that is, you give us a material world, a humanity without souls, without wings on which to rise to the skies, a humanity with no purpose in life but to seek satisfaction for bodily appetites, with a leaden sky over it through which peers no love, no hope, no consolation, where the strong assert themselves and the weak are crushed under foot, where pleasure is the norm of action, where there is no power above man himself, whose voice calls to duty, whose memory stills passion.

WARD M'ALLISTER DEAD.

"A Trip" On the North-Western Limited between the Twin Cities and Chicago is like rolling in a King's Palace over two smooth rails. If the traveling public of thirty years ago had been told of the beauties and comforts of this fine train the story would have been thought a fairy tale. But it is all a reality now and the wonder is what new comfort or luxury will come in the future. Whatever it is, it will surely be found on The North-Western Line long before other lines think to adopt it.—The Press, Osceola, Wis.

Blood Poison
THE BANE OF HUMAN LIFE,
Driven Out of the System by the Use of
Ayer's Sarsaparilla

"For five years, I was a great sufferer from a most persistent blood disease, none of the various medicines I took being of any help whatever. Hoping that change of climate would benefit me, I went to Cuba, to Florida, and then to Saratoga Springs, where I remained some time drinking the waters. But all was no use. At last, being advised by several friends to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla, I began taking it, and very soon favorable results were manifest. To-day I consider myself a perfectly healthy man, with a good appetite and not the least trace of my former complaint. To all my friends, and especially young men like myself, I recommend Ayer's Sarsaparilla, if in need of a perfectly reliable blood-purifier."—JOSE A. The "New Boy," at the opera house tonight. T. O. Sundet couldn't wait that long to see "the new boy." The kid showed up at his house on Sunday—in time for a two-o'clock matinee.

Now that the grand jury has been discharged Bierly, of the Grand Forks News will have nothing to talk about. His attacks upon Judge Ives were entirely uncalled for and too low-down for publication in a respectable paper.

Halvor Steenerson returned from St. Paul on Monday morning where he on Saturday argued against the right of the Northern Pacific railroad to come into the case known as the Steenerson rate case, as intervenor, which that company seeks to do.

The ugly rumors that went flying about affecting the integrity of Capt. M. R. Brown were not believed by those who know him best and they were perfectly confident that the captain would come out all right—which he did by a large majority.

If a man is interested enough in the welfare of the city to vote upon the issue of the bonds he ought to be interested enough to vote intelligently. To be able to do this he should look into the matter—if he does not already understand it, so that he may vote understandingly.

To accommodate new subscribers we reproduce the opening chapters of "Chicamauga" this week adding thereto the second chapter. JOURNAL readers will find this one of the best stories they have read lately. Do not fail to read it. It will appear only in the JOURNAL.

On Saturday last about noon A. K. Austin got into an altercation with Chas. Westerberg's boy, "Medahl," the upshot of which was that A. K. got a clip in the nose that started the claret freely. The causus belli was the testimony the boy gave before the grand jury. Later in the day the boy was arrested and taken to the lock-up where he was kept until Monday morning, then taken before Judge Holt. No one appearing against him he was released.

Joe Mathews: "It seems a very great pity that our citizens do not seem to take greater interest in the efforts of Rev. L. W. Squiers to provide first-class entertainments for our people. They will fill up the opera house for some catch-penny show at 50 and 75 cents per ticket, but can't afford to invest 15 cents a ticket to support a really meritorious entertainment, such as Mr. Squiers has brought here. I don't understand why it is so, but it is a shame! Talk about your enterprise! Here is a sample of how we try to build up home enterprises. I'd rather pay 50 cents each to hear those lectures than to see them starved to death."

The case against Chief Gonyea was brought before Judge Holt on Tuesday. After listening to the testimony adduced, the judge did not find sufficient evidence to warrant holding him for trial and he was discharged.

Sam Lavoy was brought before Judge Jennings on Tuesday morning and fined $5 and costs, a part of which consisted in repairing a window pane at O. Merciel's place that Lavoy broke Monday evening while under the influence.

February opened out in a way to break the record for the winter—zero weather and below, going as low as 40 degrees. Sunday and Monday were said to be by far the coldest days of the winter. One consolation is found in the fact that February is the shortest month in the year.

The Hutchinson family concert at the opera house on Saturday evening was fairly well attended and highly enjoyed. Some complaints were heard about cold weather, and part of these might have been prevented if the small boys had not been allowed to open the side doors and keep them open so that they also could see the show.

Ed. Charboneau, a Crookston old-timer was in the city last week. Ed says he is in business at Galveston, Texas and is accumulating much shekels. Ed knows how to do that if anybody does as many a Polk county man whom Ed got after when he was in the collection business here can readily testify. In those days, a man who was owing a machine note and had not the wherewithal to liquidate it had rather see the Elderly Henry coming than Ed. And yet Ed aint ½ a bad fellow as he runs. Many a worse man has been hung.

The Grand Army Post met in regular session last Friday evening and after a little work held open session until next Friday to allow all who chose to attend the cake-walk. At the meeting next Friday evening—vice-commander N. K. Olson is detailed to sing a song; Comrade Paul will tell a story and sentinel Levi LeDuc is to entertain the Post by a narrative of excerpts from his army experience. The G. A. R. boys are determined to have a good time this winter if they dont lay up a cent.

Mary J. Blaisdell known as the "Minnesota Blizzard," is besieging the legislature for a pension to recompense her for services said to have been performed by her during the war as nurse at Fort Snelling. She had applied for a pension from the government at Washington but being unable to offer proof "sufficiently sufficient" failed to obtain it so now she asks the state for aid. The case seems to be a worthy one and the request should be granted which it will no doubt.

The World's Fair, or leastwise that portion of it that claims Crookston as a home, held forth at Grand Army hall on Monday evening, and, as it was in Chicago, so in Crookston—the Midway Plaisance took the cake. An excellent supper was served and after you had partaken of that you were ushered into and through the Midway Plaisance, where you saw hundreds of interesting and pretty sights, chief among which was the "congress of beauty," that beat the Chicago outfit out of sight. Everybody agree on that and what everybody says is so. The whole affair was a grand success and netted the ladies of the Presbyterian church society and the W. R. C., who got it up, over $100.

"Beautiful Venice" as presented at the M. E. church on Thursday evening was very interesting and instructive; but we are sorry to say that the audience was small. It seems a pity that such meritorious entertainments cannot be better appreciated by our people than they seem to be. It is a fact that many a far less meritorious entertainment has filled the opera house on 50 cents a ticket while "Beautiful Venice" did not get a crowd at 15 and 20 cents big enough to pay expenses! It was a treat that should have crowded the church to its utmost capacity. Mr. Squier has worked hard and been at considerable expense to present a refining class of entertainments that are very instructive and he deserves to be amply patronized.

AT THE GRAND OPERA HOUSE

FRIDAY AND SATURDAY FEB. 22d & 23d.

DONT FAIL TO SEE AND HEAR

THE BROWNIES IN FAIRYLAND.

At the Grand Opera House, Crookston, on Friday and Saturday, Feb. 22 and 23 with matinee Saturday at 2:30 p. m., there will be produced one of the most clever conceptions of the century; we might refer to the "Brownies in Fairyland," a musical cantata for children written by the world-famous entertainer, Palmer Cox. One hundred of Crookston's brightest children take part in this mammoth production fifty boys as "Brownies," and fifthy girls as fairies. The costumes made especially for this engagement in New York under the personal supervision of Palmer Cox, are very elaborate, and make the stage appear like a page from one of Palmer Cox's famous "Brownie" books. The fat little policeman; the dude with his cane; Uncle Sam; the poet; the sailor; the Chinaman; the Indian, and dozens of other well-known Brownies will be there, and together with a live wasp, hornet and beetle will make you hold your sides with laughter for two hours. The tableaux, with changing colored calcium light effects, are the most brilliant conceivable. Rehearsals have been held for some time, and it is already well prepared. It is to be given under the auspices of the First M. E. church, Crookston Mesdames Duntley and Richardson and Mr. W. A. Sissons are instructing the children under the direction of Prof. W. A. Milne. The play is produced by special arrangement with Palmer Cox, through his managers, Major J. B. Pond, of New York, and H. B. Thearle, of Chicago.

We look forward with delight for the completion of this gigantic undertaking.

A poor afflicted Grand Army comrade arrived in the city last week from Thief River Falls trying to make his way to the Soldiers Home where he could get the care he needed, but was taken sick and could get no further than this city without aid. He went to the Minnesota house and the case was reported to the Post and a committee enquiring into the case and finding the man to be a worthy comrade in distress took the steps necessary to forward the man to the Home. It seems that he had gone up there in the fall to take a claim, found one and was trying to make a home when he was taken sick and had to go where he could get medical attendance. His trouble was incident to his service in the army and is of such a nature as to render him totally unfit to take care of himself by manual labor and yet this man only gets $12 per month from our generous government.

The county commissioners met last week, transacted some business and adjourned. The most of the business transacted related to school districts and taxes. A communication signed by the members of the city board of equalization was presented, recommending that the personal assessments of certain parties be reduced in amounts as follows: S. H. Bearns, $100; W. H. Norrie, $200; P. J. Russell, $100; Stephen J. Sprague, $200; Fontaine & Anglim, $5,500; also that the taxes of Mrs. Dan McDonald be abated altogether. The board complied with all except that in relation to Fontaine & Anglim and split the difference with that.

Mat Cornelius was granted abatement on a tract of land for the '89 and '90 taxes. The personal taxes of J. E. Nordbald, '94, was reduced $100. Application of A. Abrahamson, James Murray and J. D. Marshall referred to town equalization boards for recommendation. Petition of Berget Olson to be set off from a certain school district, granted. Petition of A. Hempstead to be set off from District No. 214 was laid over to the March meeting. Even P. Tuff and others, asking for a new district, laid over till March meeting. Auditor authorized to advertise for the construction of an iron bridge in Louisville, said bridge to be 180 foot span. Bids to be opened at the March meeting.

Gus Hanson was granted a license as auctioneer.

K. O. Stahm and others ask for a road and notices therefor ordered to be posted.

After allowing the usual grist of bills and rejecting the bill of Stephen J. Sprague as deputy sheriff the board adjourned.

Consolidation.

Losey & Buckingham, after disposing of the Twin Valley bank returned to Crookston seeking what they might devour—and the first thing the city knew they had devoured both laundries—swallowed 'em up completely. The Crookston steam laundry, owned and operated by F. M. Brown, on Main street, and the new Model laundry, by Frank Hertz, on Second street, have passed into the capacious maw of this great dual-headed laundry trust—as it were, and will be henceforth known as the Crookston Model Steam Laundry, operated by Losey & Buckingham. The JOURNAL is pleased to see these prodigal sons return to the camp, though we do not know that their departure from Twin Valley was due to a superabundance of "husks" there, unless the bank of Ada was too husky. However, the boys are all right and will make money where they are.

Fourteenth Anniversary.

At the Congregational church last Sunday evening, Rev. Herman P. Fisher gave an address on the "Origin, Principles and History of the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor.' He said: "Fourteen years ago last evening the first society was formed in Williston church, Portland, Maine. The pastor, Rev. F. E. Clark, called the young people together and they formed the society, "For Christ and the Church." William F. Pennell, a young soldier, was the first to sign the pledge. Other chapters were soon formed in the neighboring churches. The first convention of nine societies was held in June, of the next year. One year later there were fifty-three; and two years later 151.

In '81 the annual convention was held in Minneapolis, where there were more than 10,000 delegates present. Last July it was in Cleveland and more than 40,000 attended. There are in the world 37,000 societies, made up of 2,200,000 members. The Presbyterians lead numerically in this country and the Congregationalists follow. In Great Britain the Baptists lead, and in Australia the Methodists. The motto for the year is three-fold. (1) Christian Citizenship, (2) Systematic Beneficence, (3) Interdenominational Fellowship. The next convention is to be held in Boston and preparations are being made for 50,000 delegates.

Watch out for Fires!

These extremely cold days and nights require so much extra heat that great care should be exercised to prevent fires breaking out. Extra watchfulness should be used for the danger lies in being obliged to keep the stoves stuffed constantly. One cannot be too careful in this matter.

Unlike most proprietary medicines the formulæ of Dr. J. C. Ayer's Sarsaparilla and other preparations are cheerfully sent to any physician who applies for them. Hence the special favor accorded these well-known standard remedies by the World's Fair commissioners.

THE NEW BOY.

Some of the sweetest love-making you ever saw since you were jilted, will be done by a bad man's daughter in this town at the Grand Opera House on Thursday night, Feb 7, She is a bundle of witchery a dark-eyed girl, whose father is a stock speculater and adventurer wicked from the ground up; but his daughter is a fascinator, and she is to show what she can do in the way of toying with a boy's heart when she comes to this town in a few days. The young chap who is in her toils, is a school boy. The Doctor in charge of the institution is in love with a pretty buxom "widow" to whom he has willed his fortune and has made her the matron of the school. The villian also wants to marry her. You should applaud when it is discovered that the boy in school garb is a wee bit of a business man, thirty years old, and the husband of the tall, handsome "widow." The top of his head barely reaches her shoulders, He the funniest chap you ever saw, and when the Doctor discovers that he is the "widow's" husband, there is a wild scene on the stage. The applause and the laughter have continued for two hours and a half, but the last scene is beyond description. This is the play that has run to packed houses in London, New York, Chicago and other great cities. It comes to this town for the first time. The name of this extraordinary farce-comedy is "The New Boy."

The Business Men's Club.

The committee appointed at the business men's meeting to meet with the directors of the Columbia club met those gentleman on Thursday evening and a proposition was made, upon the acceptance of which the Columbia club will consent to reorganize and admit all who wish to join the new concern as a business men's club. Steps are now being taken to effect the consolidation and it is thought that it will be successful. Such a club, if properly conducted, could not fail of being of great practical benefit to the city and its growing interests.

The Common Cold.

Medical writers have recently called attention to the fact that the common cold, which most people suppose they "catch" by undue exposure, though they cannot, for the life of them tell how or when, is frequently the result of a debilitated condition of the body, and that the head-ache, catarrhal trouble, sore throat and other accompaniments of a cold are signs of an impure condition of the blood. This explanation is at least reasonable, and it is desirable that it should be understood, as it points to the proper and only method by which this uncomfortable and in many instances, dangerous condition may be avoided or overcome. It is not uncommon to hear people remark that they suffer constantly with "a cold" from early fall until the warm weather returns in the spring. This is undoubtedly due to the fact that the system is weakened, that it lacks vitality, is poorly nourished and can not resist the severer trials that come with the coming of fall and winter weather.

Of course the remedy for these ailments, and the preventive, if they have not already made their encroachments, consists in a course of treatment which will build up and strengthen the physical system. In the first place the blood must be purified and invigorated so that it can carry health and vitality to all the organs of the body, enabling the heart and lungs, the liver, bowels and skin to perform their proper functions. The digestive organs must then be stimulated and strengthened and made to do their part in supplying the wasted and much needed strength to the system.

For the work of purifying the blood and giving strength and vitality to the system, nothing has yet been found equal to Hood's Sarsaparilla. The burden of the testimonials from people who have taken Hood's Sarsaparilla is that it purifies their blood, removes pimples, boils and all similar eruptions, gives them an appetite and makes them feel strong. This is just what is needed to fortify the system against that condition for which people in general have no better name than a "cold." A few bottles of Hood's Sarsaparilla taken at this season would be sufficient to give that tone and stimulus to the organs of the body which are indispensable to health, especially in trying weather, and certainly, a few dollars expended now in taking measures to prevent sickness or even the discomforts of a long continued "cold" would be better than a fit of sickness and heavy doctor's bills later on. In buying medicine, as in buying anything else, it is well to see that you get an honest article, and such Hood's Sarsaparilla is everywhere recognized to be.

LOSS OF THE ELBE

OCEAN COLLISION RESULTS IN A TERRIBLE CATASTROPHE.

Over 350 People Drowned—Of the Passengers and Crew Not More Than a Score Saved—The Vessel Foundered in Twenty Minutes After Collision Occured.

LONDON, Feb. 2.—The North German Lloyd steamer Elbe, Captain Von Gossel, from Bremen for New York via Southampton, has been sunk in collision with the British steamer Crathie, bound from Rotterdam for Aberdeen. At the time of sending this dispatch the exact loss of life is unknown, but report has it that it was enormous. The disaster occurred before daylight at a point some 30 miles from the Hook of Holland.

The first intimation of the disaster came from Lowestoft, Suffolk, one of the chief English fishing ports. Late in the afternoon a dispatch was received from that place saying that it was reported there that a transatlantic line steamer had been sunk in the North sea and that the Loss of Life Was Very Great.

The first dispatches stated that there had been 350 persons on the Elbe and that only 19 had been saved, the rescued having been landed at Lowestoft by fishing smacks. Later dispatches to the Exchange Telegraph company and to Lloyds confirmed the report of the loss of the steamer, and still later it was learned that the Crathie, the steamer that sunk the Elbe, had put in to Maas Luis, Holland, in a damaged condition. She reported that she had been in collision with an unknown ocean steamer.

An Official Statement.

The following statement of the disaster was officially given to the Associated Press correspondent by the German vice consul, Herr Bradber, and was corrected by him. The statement was made after sifting all the interviews with the survivors and cross-questioning the officers and crew and may be classed as the consensus of the officers' opinions:

"The collision occurred 45 miles from Merschelling lightship. Though both the Elbe and the colliding steamer were going full steam ahead, the concussion was very slight. Immediately after the collision, the Elbe began to settle down, stern first, her bow mounting high into the air and rendering it impossible to reach some of the boats. As everybody crowded upon deck immediately after the shock, and in a state of great alarm, it was impossible for the orders of the captain, who was standing on the bridge, that the women and children be saved first, could be obeyed.

First Boat Immediately Swamped.

"A rush was made for the boats that were accessible. The first boat to touch the water was immediately swamped and the passengers who had crowded into it were drowned.

"The second boat launched was lost sight of in the high sea that was running, but it is feared that she capsized.

"Into the third boat, at the last moment, when the water was up to the promenade deck, the vessel sinking under their feet, and two minutes before she disappeared, there crowded 19 men, the women and children having rushed to the other side owing, it is said, to the command that they should get into the boats there.

Picked Up One.

"This third boat pulled away from the ship, and in so doing shortly afterwards passed a lady passenger, Miss Anna Buecker, who clung to the gunwale or side of the boat. Some time elapsed before she could be pulled into the boat.

"The 20 survivors drifted about until 11:10 a. m., the heavy seas repeatedly washing over the small craft, which was in constant danger of being swamped, and drenching its occupants, who had not a morsel of food to eat.

"Finally the waving of a shirt from the boat attracted the attention of the crew of the fishing smack Wild Flower, which rescued the survivors with extreme difficulty."

THE ELBE DEATH LIST.

Latest Official Figures Place the Loss of Life at 334.

NEW YORK, Feb. 2.—The last official cablegram received at the New York office of the North German Lloyd company in this city from the Bremen office shows a total loss of 332 people by the sinking of the Elbe.

Of those aboard 50 were cabin passengers an 149 steerage. The crew in and entirety consisted of 153 people.

THREE KILLED OUTRIGHT.

Milwaukee Trolley Car Drops Through a Draw.

MILWAUKEE, Feb. 5.—A trolley car of the Russell avenue and Holton street line ran through an open draw of the Kinnikinic avenue bridge at 8:30 a. m., carrying three people down to death in the icy waters of the river. Six persons were rescued from the partly submerged car.

From all accounts the accident seems to have clearly been due to the carelessness of the motorman, John Kennedy, but he stuck to his post in a vain endeavor to stop the car which he had permitted to approach too near the open draw, and paid the penalty of his carelessness with his life. The dead are John Kennedy, motorman; Miss Ehlman, a teacher, and Miss Schmidtkuntz.

Greenhut Ousted.

CHICAGO, Feb. 5.—Judge Grosscup ousted J. B. Greenhut from the receivership of the whisky trust. He allowed Receiver Lawrence to remain in office, as a representative of the directors, and appointed General John McNulta as receiver in chief. John J. Mitchell was appointed another receiver to represent the stockholders. The decision accompanying the order was long and criticized Greenhut's actions.

THE WORK OF CONGRESS

Tuesday, Jan. 29.

The house passed the bill repealing the sugar differential clause of the tariff bill by a vote of 239 to 31.

Most of the day in the senate was given to the bankruptcy bill, Mr. Mitchell of Oregon offering a substitute on the lines of the so-called Torrey bankruptcy bill, and Mr. George of Mississippi speaking at length in explanation of the bill.

Wednesday, Jan. 30.

The house has entered upon the consideration of the Union Pacific funding measure, commonly known as the Reilly bill. A special order gives two days for debate.

The principal feature of the senate session was the denunciation of the president's financial policy by Senator Vest. The senator asserted with dramatic emphasis that he has thus far held his peace, but that there must now be a separating of the ways between him and the president. The senate spent the rest of the day in executive session on the Japanese treaty, which was ratified.

Thursday, Jan. 31.

The house devoted six hours to the debate on the Pacific railroad funding bill, and, although the speeches on both sides were characterized by unusual earnestness, there was no marked nor sensational incidents.

The senate ostensibly discussed the District of Columbia appropriation bill, but in reality branched off into a financial discussion. Gorman urged action on financial measures, and made a very effective speech.

Friday, Feb. 1.

Most of the day in the senate was given to the consideration of the District of Columbia appropriation bill, without completing it. Senator Teller gave notice that no hurried financial legislation would be allowed to go through the senate at this session.

The house was considerably broken up by a personal encounter between Representatives Breckinridge and Heard of Missouri. District of Columbia business occupied what time could be spared from the discussion of the encounter.

Saturday, Feb. 2.

The house, by a large majority, after two days' discussion, recommitted the Reilly Pacific funding bill for amendment.

A bill was passed reviving the rank of lieutenant general of the army. Schofield will be the beneficiary.

Monday, Feb. 4.

An attempt was made in the house to pass an omnibus bill for the payment of claims for stores and supplies confiscated from loyal people in the South during the war, amounting to $718,763. It excited much opposition and especially from Pennsylvania members interested in war claims amounting to $1,000,000 and not included, and the measure was defeated—95 to 148. A rule was then adopted for the consideration of the currency bill until Thursday, after which the remainder of the day was devoted to the agricultural appropriation bill, which was passed without amendment. An attempt to reduce the appropriation for the distribution of seed failed.

The senate spent almost the entire day on the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

BISMARCK, N. D., Jan. 31.—The family of Peter Olson, consisting of himself, his wife and three children, the eldest a boy aged 12 years, together with one Bathga, a hired man employed by Olson, was completely wiped out by fire. Olson was a prosperous farmer and wheat buyer, and lived about a mile and a half south of the little village of Sterling, 30 miles east of here on the Northern Pacific road.

Extreme Agony

With Rheumatism—Joints in Arms and Limbs Affected.

Blood Purified and Pains Driven Out by Hood's Sarsaparilla.

"C. I. Hood & Co., Lowell, Mass.:

"I can say with all my heart 'Praise God for Hood's Sarsaparilla.' Three years ago rheumatism terribly affected my hands and feet, mostly in the joints. They became inflamed and swollen. The family physician treated me and for a time I thought I was free from my trouble, but shortly it returned with renewed energy. My heart was affected so that my breathing was suffocating during the attacks of Extreme Agony.

I would be apparently well on going to bed but in an hour I would be awakened by shooting pains in the joints, and could not move without increased pain. Anything applied did not give relief until the doctor recommended blistering, which, though severe treatment, lessened the pain. During all my trouble I had thought seriously of taking Hood's Sarsaparilla. Finally I began with the medicine and I simply say that

I am Well

and thankful for what Hood's Sarsaparilla has done for me. I believe that if anyone troubled with rheumatism or anything caused by bad blood would take a course with Hood's Sarsaparilla and take it in earnest that they will get well and be happy. I have taken eleven bottles and also Hood's Vegetable Pills and can now work all day and do not have any rheumatic pains."

A YOUNG GIRL'S FORTUNE.

AN INTERESTING SKETCH.

Nothing appeals so strongly to a mother's affection as her daughter just budding into womanhood. Following is an instance: "Our daughter, Blanche, now 15 years of age, had been terribly afflicted with nervousness, and had lost the entire use of her right arm. She was in such a condition that we had to keep her from school and abandon her music lessons. In fact, we feared St. Vitus dance, and are positive but for an invaluable remedy she would have had that terrible affliction. We had employed physicians, but she received no benefit from them. The first of last August she weighed but 75 pounds, and although she has taken only three bottles of Nervine she now weighs 106 pounds; her nervousness and symptoms of St. Vitus dance are entirely gone, she attends school regularly, and studies with comfort and ease. She has recovered complete use of her arm, her appetite is splendid, and no money could procure for our daughter the health Dr. Miles' Nervine has brought her.

When my brother recommended the remedy I had no faith in patent medicines, and would not listen to him, but as a last resort he sent us a bottle, we began giving it to Blanche, and the effect was almost immediate."—Mrs. R. R. Bullock, Brighton, N. Y.

Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine is sold by all druggists on a positive guarantee, or sent direct by the Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind., on receipt of price, $1 per bottle, six bottles for $5, express prepaid. It is positively free from opiates or dangerous drugs.

NO DOG IN HER HOUSE.

A Boarding House Keeper Tells Why She Has Made This Rule.

Persons with dogs and other pets meet with a cold and clammy reception in New York boarding houses. They may occasionally steal into fashionable flats, where the landlord or agent has no direct means of circumventing them, but when it comes to the boarding house things are a little more definite.

A nice looking married couple went into a Twenty-third street boarding house the other day and were made comfortable. After the first dinner the lady was observed scraping together some dainties from the board to take to her room. The landlady, who is a woman of great decision of character, heard of it, and her knock was shortly afterward heard at the door of the new boarders. The latter were immediately notified that either they or the dog must vacate at once.

"If I cannot keep my darling Xenophon, we'll move," protested the owner of the dog, who practiced the principle of "Love me, love my dog."

"Then you'll have to move," said the landlady firmly. "I'm not keeping a dog kennel."

"How in the world they ever got that dog in here without my seeing it," said she, after the obnoxious Xenophon had been disposed of, "is more than I can understand. I've had all I want of dogs. A gentleman used to keep a small but ferocious bulldog in his room where I once lived. He was the ugliest brute I ever laid my eyes on—the dog, not the man. That dog wouldn't let anybody but his owner tamper with him. The man used to lug him around with him everywhere he went. One night, when the man came in, he was feeling so oblivious to earthly things that he left his dog locked in the vestibule. The next boarder who came in got no farther than the vestibule and landed down the steps with a square yard of trousers missing. He was soon joined by another boarder, who wanted to come to bed. They rang the bell until several of us came down to see what was the matter. On opening the door the dog sprung for us as if he hadn't been fed for a week and wanted anything that came handy, but we slammed the door to again just in time. As we could not awaken the owner we had to leave the dog there till morning, and those who were outside had to go to a hotel. In the morning everybody had to go and come by the servant's entrance until the owner of the animal came down and got us out of the fix."

"What did he say?"

"Say! Why, he abused us all as a set of brutes for keeping his dog locked up there and gathered it up under his arm and took it up stairs as if had been a piece of Dresden china! And the boarders, who had been locked out left the house for good the next day. We got rid of the dog, but not until it had half depopulated the establishment."—Chicago Tribune.

Woman Can't Hold Office In Washington.

Judge McClinton of the superior court of Clallam county has virtually decided that under law women cannot hold office in this state. The case which came before him was that of Charles Russell relator, against Ella Guptill. Miss Guptill was in November elected superintendent of schools in this county, and received the largest majority of any of the successful candidates, but on the strength of an opinion received from the attorney general it was decided to contest her election, with the result that Judge McClinton overruled the demurrer of the complaint, which decides the case as far as the superior court is concerned. Miss Guptill's attorneys say that they will appeal the case to the supreme court.—Seattle Post-Intelligencer.

Knew His Business.

"That's the seventh time this morning," said the shoe merchant as a customer left the store, "that you told me in a tone of voice that couldn't escape being overheard that a woman reminded you of 'Trilby.'"

"Yes," replied the new clerk, "and that's the seventh woman that I've sold a pair of shoes to."—Washington Star

DISTRICT COURT.

W. D. Russel was represented by Attorneys Montague and Bucklen, who moved the court to have a further hearing and introduce further testimony, but the court held that their answer was not sufficient to constitute a defense, and the motion was denied. Russell had been examined by the Court on Wednesday when he first appeared in court. The Court finds the defendant guilty of contempt of this court, and orders that the defendant, W. D. Russell, pay a fine of $250, or be confined not less than six month's in jail in default of payment of such fine, and in addition, to be imprisoned in the county jail of Polk county, for a term of 30 days. Mr. Montague gave notice of appeal to the supreme court on writ of certiorari. The necessary papers to be made out later.

J. J. Molstad was arraigned on an indictment for allowing gambling devices to be used in his saloon. He was placed under bonds in the sum $200. Plead not guilty.

SATURDAY, FEB. 2.

Wm. Franklin, of East Grand Forks, indicted for keeping gambling devices in his saloon was arraigned, plead not guilty and placed under bonds of $500, and to keep the peace and observe the law.

Herin and Johnson, of Crookston, indicted on the same charge plead not guilty and were placed under $500 bonds. Bergquist Bros. got the same medicine.

Mr. Enright, of East Grand Forks for running a house of ill fame.

M. T. Hugness, East Grand Forks, keeping gambling devices. Fred Laugenslaugher, keeping gambling devices. They were placed under bonds for their appearance at the next general term. All the cases resulting from the indictments found by the special grand jury go over to the next general term of court.

A. R. Holston appeared for Brown and DeWolf and moved to dismiss the presentments against them and reinstate them on the jury, on the ground of insufficiency of evidence to sustain the charges. The Court overruled the motion, as it was not within his province to dismiss them without a hearing, and that he would hear them at 3 o'clock.

When the cases were called at 3 p. m. M. P. DeWolf was sworn and denied point blank that he had any such a conversation as Molstad testified to. Tim. Sullivan was sworn and denied all the statements made by Molstad, and that he never got the $250 referred to, or any other sum from Dan Sullivan; that he never approached Brown and made any offer or promise to swerve him from doing his duty as a grand juror. Mr. Brown wanted to be sworn, as he would deem it a favor and an especial privilege to testify in the matter. The Court told him it was unnecessary, as the evidence was principally hearsay and the grand jury had evidently made a mistake. He then ordered Mr. Brown and DeWolf discharged and reinstated.

The grand jury was called in and the two members took their places and answered to the roll call. The foreman handed the Court three or four indictments and a presentment or two. One of the presentments is against Chief Gonyea, of Crookston, for allowing saloons to remain open on Sunday. The judge then addressed the jury in substance as follows:

"I have examined the charges preferred against the jurors, DeWolf and Brown, and I have examined another witness, which it was not practicable for you to get, and from the evidence, it being hearsay, I find the charges are not true, and they have been reinstated as members of the jury, without prejudice. The court does not wish to reflect upon the duties you have performed. Grand jurors are sometimes led to believe that certain things are true when they are not. Certain facts come together and produce an effect upon jurors' minds that is altogether wrong. The reinstated jurors will retire with you to the jury room.

After retirement the jurors prepared a little souvenir in the shape of an autograph album, to hand in with their report, on the first page of which was the expressed sympathy of the grand jury with the Court in his earnest effort to suppress vice and crime., wishing him long life and that he may long preside over this court, followed by an appropriate quotation referring to the pursuance of good and evil, from J. G. Holland; and on the pages following were the names and addresses of the grand jurors, closing with the sentiment: "Now is the time for all good men to come to the aid of the law." (usually written party, instead of law) which sentiment was subscribed to by County Attorney Gossman and Assistant County Attorney O'Brien. The jury then came in and in an unique, manner Foreman Childs addressed the Court about as follows:

"May it please the Court, there has been some complaint made to me in regard to indicting the judge of this district for calling this special grand jury, but there is not sufficient evidence to indict, therefore we have prepared a presentment, and I am authorized by the members of this grand jury to present to you this autograph. He then read the sympathy of the jury with the Court in his work, and Holland's lines inscribed on the first pages and handed the little book to his honor. The Judge was taken by surprise but soon recovered, and showed his appreciation in a few well chosen remarks. He told them that he did not pursue this matter solely from his own motives, but that he had often been urged and encouraged when in conversation with the governor and other peace officers of the state to go on and break up these bad practices. So far as my duty is concerned I had no hesitancy in doing it; and since the last grand jury was discharged I sometimes had serious doubts whether it was best for me to carry it through or drop it, but upon reflection I thought that cowardly, and I braced up and determined to do my duty. I don't want you or anybody else to consider that I have done any more than what I conscientiously believed was my duty, and what every judicial officer swears to do when he takes upon himself the oath of office. Every man has rights and government is to see that his rights are not usurped by others. The crimes that have been suffered to go on in this county for the last eight or ten years, when considered in the light of environments, are enormous. We are not supposed to be a frontier state where they have laws permitting gambling and part of the profits go to the state. Our laws do not permit it, and we must take the law as we find it. I am proud of the fact that you have done your duty. I am thankful for the work you have done. It has been the longest grand jury term ever held in this county, and you have done more work than any grand jury ever assembled here. I don't want any of you to go away thinking there is any feeling on the part of the court against any of you. I again thank you for your faithfulness and for the souvenir, and with this I discharge you.

The additional punishment of 30 days in jail imposed on W. D. Russell, by request was remitted, upon his paying his fine, which Russell agreed to do. Court then adjourned till 10 a. m., Feb. 4th, at chambers.

MONDAY, FEB. 4, '95.

Court convened at Chambers at 10 at 10 a. m. The case of W. E. McKenzie vs. County Commissioners, appeal from justice court, was tried, and decided in favor of plaintiff. W. Watts for plaintiff and A. R. Holston for defendant.

A motion for a new trial in the case of Sarah Swift vs. John Withers was heard and denied. There are four more court cases to be heard before this term's work is finished. No more cases will be heard until Saturday of this week, when the case of H. E. Cooke vs. W. A. Hammond will be tried. Number of indictments found by the grand jury, sixty.

IN Making Bread and Cake the best results, the finest flavored, sweetest, lightest, and most wholesome foods, are obtained by the use of the best baking powder. The highest scientific authorities, alike with American housekeepers, agree that the ROYAL is the best.

As the result of my tests, I find the ROYAL BAKING POWDER superior to all the others in every respect. It is entirely free from all adulteration and unwholesome impurity, and in baking it gives off a greater volume of leavening gas than any other powder. It is therefore not only the purest, but also the strongest powder with which I am acquainted.

THE FIRE LADDIES

OF THE VALLEY

Meet at Crookston, Organize an Association

And Decide to Hold a Summer Tournament.

E. A. Nelson, the chief of the Hallock fire department, gives the following account of the meeting last week, in his paper, the Hallock News:

In response to the call issued by the chiefs of Crookston and Hallock fire departments, the brave fire laddies of the Red River Valley met at the assembly rooms of the Crookston department on Tuesday evening and organized a tournament association to be known as the "Northwestern Minnesota Fire Department Tournament Association." Nearly all the fifteen departments in these four northern counties were represented either by their chiefs or proxies.

The meeting was called to order by A. C. Schmidt, Chief of the Crookston Dept., and the object of the meeting explained. The fact was set forth that the union of the different departments into a common organization would do much towards keeping up an interest in the work and stimulate activity in volunteer departments. The boys then got down to business by electing A. C. Schmidt temporary chairman, and E. A. Nelson secretary.

Owing to the unavoidable absence of Mayor Cromb, an address was delivered by Alderman Jas. E. Morrisey, President of the city council in which in his usual felicitous manner he welcomed them to the city, testified to the efficiency of volunteer fire departments expressed the hope and belief that the meeting would be productive of much good to the cities whose representives were assembled. He closed by extending the freedom of the city to the delegates. Ex-Chief J. E. O'Brien, of Crookston, delivered an address which was full of practical thought and suggestion, and was followed by County attorney Gossman, who is as handy with a spanner as with a law book. Mr. Gossman's remarks were in line of suggestion on organization, were thoroughly practical, and were acted upon at once. On motion of Chief Nelson, of Hallock, they proceeded to organize by electing the following officers to act until the first regular delegate meeting of the association: A. C. Schmidt, Crookston, Pres.; E. A. Nelson, Hallock, vice pres.; L. G. Thearer, Crookston, sec.; J. G. Farr, Thief River Falls, treas. It was unanimously agreed to hold a tournament in Crookston during June, the date to be fixed later, and a committee of arrangements to prepare for it was appointed consisting of A. C. Schmidt, E. H. Woolery, Warren, and D. Robertson, of Argyle. A committee on by-laws and permanent rules, to be prepared and presented for approval at the next meeting was named as follows; J. E. O'Brien, of Crookston, A. A. Brown, East Grand Forks, M. Sanaker, Fisher, Ole Narveson, McIntosh, Louis Hintze, Ada, and the Fertile department. On transportation the following were appointed; John R. McKinnon, F. G. Ruach and A. C. Schmidt. The matter of prizes to be given at the tournament was left with the committee on arrangements and program, and the organization was complete so far as the immediate needs require.

During the entire meeting, the best of feelings prevailed and judging by the amount of earnest enthusiasm shown, the association will be a grand success. Apparently all seemed fully awake to the fact that something is needed to stimulate the the departments to the necessary drill and practice, and this idea of a tournament association struck all as being just the thing.

The visiting chiefs and firemen were royally entertained by the Crookston department and citizens.

After the meeting adjourned, an informal banquet was held at Dan. McKinnon restaurant and the evening ended with a good social time in the Columbia Club rooms.

DAY OF SENSATIONS

Proceedings in the Hayward Trial Develop Many Dramatic Incidents.

BROTHER ADRY ON THE STAND.

Another Chapter in the Ging Murder Told With Awful Emphasis.

MINNEAPOLIS, Feb. 12.—The day's proceedings in the Hayward trial developed many sensational and dramatic incidents. Adry Hayward, brother of the accused man, was on the stand, and the mother of the two boys occupied a seat in close proximity to the prisoner.

The most dramatic and affecting scene occurred at noon adjournment. Hardly had the crowd begun to push toward the doors than Adry Hayward pushed his way to his mother's side. Mrs. Hayward turned and the tears sprung to her eyes as she leaned forward into Adry's arms. Tenderly the son kissed his mother, who sobbed out:

"Adry! Adry! How could you? How could you do it?" referring to the testimony he had just placed on record

Against His Brother's Life.

Adry was visibly affected, and, placing his hand to his eyes, his one arm encircling his mother's form, replied:

"I had to, mother; it was my duty."

Then, placing his hand caressingly upon her shoulder, he endeavored to comfort her. Harry, who had stood by during this affecting scene, stepped forward and pushed Adry's hand from the mother's shoulder, exclaiming:

"Don't, Adry; can't you see you are exciting her?"

Adry fell back and Mrs. Hayward stood sobbing for a time in Harry's arms. Then her sister advanced and led her from the room.

ADRY'S TESTIMONY.

Harry's Brother Tells of Plans to Kill Catherine Ging.

Ex-Mayor Eustis was on the stand at the opening of the morning session, but nothing of importance was brought out either in his direct or cross examination.

Adrian Hayward was then called to the stand and a buzz of subdued interest went around the courtroom. He stated that he was 33 and Harry was 29 years of age. He had come to Minneapolis 25 years ago from Mecoupin county, Illinois, where he was born. He was married and had two children. He was employed in his father's office where he transacted most of the loan and rental business. Harry was not employed there but often came there. Harry had told him that last summer and fall he was engaged in loaning money on diamonds.

Harry Hayward also told him that he had gambled some. He had told him of having loaned money for Miss Ging, and having gambled with her money.

He Had a Delusion.

At this point Mr. Erwin arose and impressively said: "I wish to enter an objection here. This witness has a delusion on this subject, and is, in fact, insane."

"I don't see," said the court, "that he's any more insane than some of the attorneys in this case."

"I take an exception of the court's ruling," retorted Mr. Erwin, "and to the court's remark before this jury."

"He told me," continued Adry, "that she held some notes secured by a mortgage on a flour mill at Hamel, and asked me to go out with him to Hamel's and see about it. We drove out, and though I advised him against the loan, he made it. Three weeks later he came in and said he

Had Been Very Lucky

as the mill had burned and he would probably get the money to handle. About the middle of September he asked me if I wanted to make good money. I said yes, and he said I could get about $2,000 if I was not too particular. He asked me if I was willing to kill a woman for $2,000. I said I was not willing to kill anybody. He said it was easy to do it and nobody would be suspicious of me, as they only looked up a set of criminals who had been convicted of crime before. After that he said he knew a hackman that would do anything for him. He said it would be easy to and if necessary the hackman could be killed too. I asked him if the hackman had a family and he said he did. I then said it would be an awful thing to kill a woman, let alone a hackman. After that he suggested getting her drowned in a lake but that looked too much like suicide and he gave it up. Then he took her buggy riding and they should strike a boulder, whether she would fall in or out. After that he talked about getting her tangled up in the lines and have the horse run away.

The Life Insurance Question.

Turning to the question of life insurance the witness said:

"He said the dressmaker had been up in the New York Life and had passed the examination all right but there was some mistake about the papers and they had to be sent back. She had made a mistake in getting a $5,000 instead of a $7,000 policy. He was quite angry and said: 'Damn her'—he hardly ever swore—'the fool, I'll kill her now, if I don't ever get a cent. I'll make more out of it now than if she hadn't made such a damn bull out of it.' On Friday Harry came into the office and asked me if it wasn't

Time to Sacrifice the Dressmaker?

I said: 'Harry, you're not going to kill the dressmaker, are you?' He said: 'Yes we are. She'll have to be the victim this time. I said: 'Harry you mustn't do it; it's awful.' He replied: 'She's got to go this time.' I said Harry you mustn't do this. If you don't quit this idea, I'll report you.' His hands were clutching as I said that, and he looked wild. I am not naturally afraid of anybody but I was afraid of him then. I moved to where my coat and hat were hanging, and was just making for the door, when Harry came after me quick. I told him I was going out to walk until he cooled off. I went out to my rooms and got my revolver and finally went back to the office. Harry was still there but was cooler.

Nothing to Kill People.

"I repeated to Harry that he mustn't think of such a thing. He said it was nothing to kill people. He had caused the death of three persons ——"

"We move to have that struck out," put in Erwin.

"Denied," said the court promptly.

"He said," went on the witness, "that he had killed two persons in the East and he had killed a third, but he stopped there and would not say anything more. He also said he had caused a fire in the East where the loss was $450,000. He said he Got $2 for Doing It.

"He said there was nothing in haunting people. I had told him that if he killed her she would haunt him. He said: 'People may dream of such things, but if you had any nerve you would go out and kill somebody. It don't make any difference who, so you kill somebody. Kill a cripple. It's better for them to die than to live any way. Go out and kill some one and I will give you $100.'

"Shortly after 7:30 on the night of the murder, Harry came to my flat and asked me for $5.

Harry Seemed Excited.

I gave it to him, and then he said, 'You'd better go to the theatre tonight. Take your wife and go. Something is going to happen.' He seemed a little excited—it was one of the few times I ever saw him excited. I took him by the arm and tried to detain him. He shook himself loose and said: 'I've no time to fool now; I'm in a hurry.' My wife sat there rocking the baby. Then he asked me to go into his room about 9:30 and see if his revolver was under his pillow. I refused, and he then asked me to raise the curtain in my room so that he could see the light about 10 o'clock. I refused to do that, too. He then went away. I asked my wife if she didn't want to go up and make a visit to her father. At first she said she was too tired, but we finally went.

Something Had Happened.

"When we got home or shortly afterwards, I heard a quick step in the hallway and then saw a light in Harry's room. I heard nothing more until 3 in the morning when Harry came to the door and said: 'Something has happened. Miss Ging has been murdered. She was found stone dead in the road near Lake Calhoun.' He asked me to come into his flat and I did so. He got out his Colt's revolver and cleaned it. There was very little dirt on it. As he was doing this he said: 'It's just like picking up money.' Then he lay down on the lounge with his overcoat over him. I went back to my flat. We got up early the next morning to get a paper."

The Cross-Examination.

The cross-examination of Adry was virulent and exhaustive. At times Adry grew vexed and flung retorts at the attorney, at no time, however, showing himself lacking mentally. He did show some animus against Harry, however, at various times, but in all the long examination he did not contradict his original story told in the morning.

THE STATE'S CASE.

Resume os the Testimony That May Convict Hayward.

MINNEAPOLIS, Feb. 11.—Three full weeks have been consumed in the trial of Harry T. Hayward, accused of the murder of Catherine Ging, and yet the state is not through with the forging of the chain of evidence upon which it depends for conviction.

At the present time it will be interesting to know what the state has shown. It has proved a murder on that lonely road near the lake. Blixt, the self-confessed murderer, admitted the killing and told how he fired the shot. In graphic detail he told how Harry had proposed the killing, told him about the life insurance, said he had killed men before, threatened the life of Mrs. Blixt unless he complied with his request, plied him with liquor, met him at the Kenwood boulevard where was Miss Ging and the buggy, and they took the fatal drive.

Police officers and others testified in regard to remarks of Harry that she had been murdered for her money, and that he was "done up." Then the deals with Miss Ging in gambling and the $10,000 life insurance taken out in favor of Harry were shown. There was corroboration of Blixt's story as to the many talks in the basement, the breaking of the T rail, and the fact that they both left the flat almost at the same time. That, very briefly, is the story of the witnesses for the state. It has shown a motive for the crime, and has the confession of the actual assassin, who admits the killing and apparently cares not for the consequences, but wants Harry to be shown as the prime mover and the beneficiary from the plot.

Mexico Will Arbitrate.

GUATEMALA, Feb. 12.—The news from the City of Mexico that that country is willing to submit the question of amount of indemnity either to a mixed commission or to arbitration is considered an important concession in favor of Guatemala.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

From our Regular Correspondent.

WASHINGTON, FEB. 8, 1895.

Wise men can give good advice, but the wisest of men cannot compel the acceptance for their advice. Ex-Speaker Reed's substitute for the Cleveland gold bond bill, which declarations of Senators made an impossibility before it was voted upon by the House, proves the truth of this statement: Mr. Reed's bill would if enacted into a law, provide the government with the means to raise the gold reserve fund to its proper amount, and by providing the Secretary of the Treasury with money to meet deficiencies in the revenues of the government until such time as the revenues of the government should exceed the expenditures would keep the gold reserve intact. Here is Mr. Reed's statement of the situation: "We were redeeming greenbacks when they were presented. If the revenue was equal to the expenditures whenever a greenback was redeemed it would stay in the Treasury, and this notwithstanding the fact the Secretary is authorized to reissue; for it is not either the authorization or even the demand of the law that they shall be reissued that causes the trouble. It is the fact that they are reissued. It is the fact that their reissuance causes this continued depletion of the Treasury."

"Much ado about nothing" is about the only correct title to apply to the financial debate and the votes taken this week in the House. Every man of even average intelligence knew beforehand that it made not the slightest difference what the House did or what they failed to do, so far as the accomplishment of any financial legislation is concerned. They knew that Mr. Cleveland had all his arrangements made for another bond issue, and that it would be made. About the only result of the debate in the House was that it enabled some of the outgoing Democrats to put in a strong claim for Presidential appointment to office.

Public Printer Benedict has never been popular with members of the G. A. R., but his impolite treatment of a committee from that organization which called on him for the purpose of asking the re-instatement of comrades who had been dismissed without cause, has aroused a hatred towards him in the breasts of all soldiers, which Mr. Benedict may live to regret. "I have admitted you here today in order to be able to tell you that you will never be admitted again," were the words Benedict greeted the G. A. R. committee with when they were admitted to his office. He not only refused in impolite language to re-instate any of the discharged veterans, but he even refused to look at the list prepared by the committee, saying curtly, "not one of them will be put back;" and when the committee stood dumbfounded at such treatment, he angrily continued: "There is nothing further to be said; what are you waiting for?"

The fact is not generally known that Washington's new Senator, Mr. Wilson, was about fifteen years ago a $1,200 clerk in the Pension Bureau here. He was appointed from Indiana, where he was born. He soon tired of the routine work of a clerk and announced his intention to go west and try to do something better. "John" said one of his fellow clerks, "you would do better to hold on to what you've got. If you go west you'll starve. They are fertilizing the soil out there with the bodies of ambitious youngsters from the east who are unable to keep up with the procession. Hold on to your hundred dollars a month here. You'll never make that much anywhere in the west." His reply was characteristic of the energy which afterwards got him elected to the House and has now landed him in the Senate—"well, starve or thrive, I'm going to try my luck. I've looked over this situation thoroughly, and now I'll take my information and training out there and capitalize them. Just hold your horses for a spell and you'll see me back here with a Congressman's commission in my hand, or something even better." Senator Wilson has no more sincere well-wishers anywhere than those who worked beside him as clerks; they like him because his success has not turned his head. He is to them the same old John Wilson.

The Senate had another spell of plain talk about Hawaii and its ultimate annexation, over the amendment to the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill, providing $500,000 to begin the work of laying a cable between San Francisco and Honolulu, and authorizing the president to enter into a contract for the entire work.

Slowly but surely the power of the Democrats has slipped away from them in the Senate. Up to last Saturday they had a majority of that body, but upon that day by the swearing in of Senator Mantle, of Montana, they lost their majority and only had enough votes left to tie the Senate on a full vote. Now they have lost that power as another new Republican senator—Clark, of Wyoming—was on Wednesday sworn in.

CROOKSTON'S VETERAN NURSERYMAN

FRANK T. HASELTINE,

Has Some Views Concerning Improvements, and Talks Entertainingly to a Journal Scribe.

Meeting Frank T. Haseltine on Tuesday our reporter asked him: "What's new?" "Well," said Frank musingly, "the newest news I know of I don't like a great deal, and that is the prospects of losing our pork factory, which, I understand, will be taken to Grand Forks. Mr Stanton tells me the project contemplates an establishment capable of taking care of 10,000 hogs every year, which would make a good deal of business for Crookston, and we should keep it here.. Then we ought to have a grist mill, a starch factory, a woolen mill and knitting factory. I know of a little village in Wisconsin that has an institution of the kind and employs 85 hands. This benefits the village and the market thus afforded for wool benefits the farmers. Speaking of the farmers reminds me that with the future prospects for wheat they will have to look out for something else, and I am led to wonder that more of them don't catch on to the idea of raising small fruits. My experience in raising small fruits shows that there is always profit in it—always a good cash market for such things." "But," said our reporter, "I have heard farmers say that it was a very difficult matter to successfully raise small fruits; they claim that they have tried to raise currants and while they can get good bushes they don't get any fruit to speak of. How's that?" "Well," said Mr. H. with a smile, "that calls up another question, and that is how to do it. There is not one farmer in a hundred but what always has a plenty of manure that he could use on his small fruit patch if he would—but he don't; and then very much also depends upon how you go to work. I would tell you how I do it, but that would take up too much space for this issue." "How, about giving the JOURNAL a synopsis of your method of small fruit culture for our next issue, Frank?" "All right," he responded, "I am very much interested in the success of this country, and if I can do anything to help it along I am willing to do it. I will write you a small article for the next issue." Saying which Frank departed to look after his business interests, and left our reporter pondering over the fact that another cause for failure with many who try to raise small fruits, is in the fact that they buy their stock of unreliable fakirs, who don't care a snap whether the farmer makes a cent in the deal or not so long as they get their own money out of it.

Buckingham's Dye for the Wiskers does its work thoroughly, coloring a uniform brown or black, which, when dry, will neither rub, wash off, nor soil linen.

THOSE BONDS.

On Tuesday next our citizens will be called upon to vote on the proposed bond issue and strange as it may seem there is said to be opposition to their issue. We do not see how anybody, having the welfare of the city at heart, can oppose a measure of so great benefit. The circumstances are such that the money must be had in this way or it must come out of the people in greatly increased rates of taxation. This method would be a long range one, involving a number of suits against the city, and consequent expenses that can be avoided by borrowing the money now needed. Vote for the bonds.

Lincoln Anniversary.

An interesting service entitled: "The Two Emancipations," was held in the Congregational Church last Sunday evening, that being the nearest Sunday to the birth of the great emancipator. Extracts were read from Lincoln's "Gettysburg Speech" and the emancipation proclamation, also from an address of Senator George F. Hoar on the "Rights of the Freed Men." The service was partly responsive, so that all might take part, and included appropriate hymns and an anthem. Among the individuals who took special parts were Messrs. Miller, Brown, Bivins, Walter Stone, Mrs. Lewis and Miss Williams.

"THE WINNER"

Is a first-class cigar, printed on pure Havanna leaf tobacco and published by Iver A. Krohn, at No. 111 North Main St., Crookston, Minn. Entered according to act of congress at the post office in Crookston as purely FIRST-class male matter—and that it is first-class in every particular we are prepared to vouch for from the sample copy sent this office on Tuesday morning—not necessarily for publication, but as an evidence of good faith, by the publisher, Iver A. Krohn, Esq. Everybody who enjoys a really good cigar should sample this new candidate for the popular favor.

Methods of Lighting.

From the pine tree torch of the savage to the incandescent electric light is a long stride, and the greater portion of it has been taken by man in the past hundred years. Until the invention of illuminating gas, men depended on oil wicks, in all forms from the stone lamp of the Romans, and the saucer and tallowed rug of our own back-woodsman, to the glass lamp with the argand burner supplied with the spermaceti oil of the whale. The lighting of city streets, however, appears to be of considerable antiquity, as Antioch seems to have had its streets lighted in the third century, while there is still extant an order of the governor of Edessa, 505 A. D. that the street lamps should be kept burning all night. Paris was the first modern city to have lighted streets, 1524, the practice having died out during the middle ages. In London when it was proposed, the objection was seriously urged that people would be unable to sleep in their houses, if the streets, were lighted. Until a dozen years ago, gas was the great artificial illuminator, and it has not lost its place, since several railroads, such as The Burlington, light their sleepers and coaches with the Pintsch compressed gas, carried in iron cylinders under the car. In other respects, as well as that of a brilliant yet soft and agreeable illumination, The Burlington is a model line, and people who have made acquaintance with its merits, are quite sure to buy their tickets that way. For more light on the subject, or for maps, time-tables or tickets, call on your local agent, or address W. J. C. Kenyon, Gen. Pass. Agent, St. Paul, Minn.

"If The Problem of designing a sleeping car for the comfort of invalids obliged to travel were given to a society of physicians we do not believe the solution would require one convenience not offered in the private compartment sleeping cars on the Northwestern Limited between Minneapolis, S. Paul and Chicago. Art and skill can surely accomplish nothing further in the matter of making sleeping cars more comfortable.—The Lancet, St. Paul.

FOUR ARE SENTENCED

LEADERS OF THE HAWAIIAN REBELLION FOUND GUILTY.

Treason Was the Charge—Many Others Convicted but Not Yet Sentenced—The Queen's Trial Comes Next, and Officials Claim to Have Evidence to Convict.

VICTORIA, B. C., Feb. 11.—Hawaiian advices by steamer Warrimoo to Feb. 2: There is a lull in affairs here and quiet will probably reign until the military court now sitting will have finished its work. There are a large number of conspiracy cases yet to be tried and the probabilities are that the court will sit for two or three weeks at least. Great interest is attached to the forthcoming trial of the ex-queen. The government claims to have more than sufficient evidence to convict her. What her punishment will be, in case of conviction is hard to conjecture. Her case will probably come up on next Monday. She is charged with treason.

Findings in Twenty-four Cases.

The military commission has brought in findings in 24 cases. Of this number two were acquitted. The others were all found guilty and sentences were fixed by the commission subject to review by President Dole. The sentences vary much, all the way from sentence of death to imprisonment for five years, treason by the Hawaiian statutes is imprisonment for five years and a fine of not less than $5,000. The six leaders were all sentenced to be hanged. They are Charles T. Gulick, William H. Rickhard, William S. Seward, Robert W. Wilcox, Sam Nowlein and Henry Bertolman. Sentence in the last two cases will be commuted, as both men have

Furnished Valuable Evidence

for the government. Gulick was born in this country. Rickard is an Englishman. Wilcox is a Hawaiian. Tho only with fines.

Rumor of a Protectorate.

SAN FRANCISCO, Feb. 11.—The Examiner prints a story from its correspondent at Honolulu to the effect that Admiral Beardsley has taken possession of Pearl harbor and declared a protectorate over the Hawaiian Islands. The news came to Victoria by the steamer Warrimoo.

QUEEN ABDICATES.

Liliuokalani Resigns All Rights in Favor of the Republic.

HONOLULU, Jan. 30, via San Francisco, Feb. 9.—Liliuokalani has abdicated in favor of the republic. This is by far the most important outcome of the late rebellion. The document was drawn up by A. S. Hartwell at the request of the ex-queen. It was presented on the 26th inst. to President Dole. The document, according to the wording, was executed freely and voluntarily.

Stevens Is Dead.

AUGUSTA, Me., Feb. 9.—Hon. John L. Stevens, ex-minister to Hawaii, is dead.

INDEFINITELY POSTPONED.

North Dakota House Defeats Resubmission by a Ruse.

BISMARCK, N. D., Feb. 11.—When the order of messages from the senate was reached in the house and Haggert's resubmission resolution was read, Cooper moved that it be indefinitely postponed. The motion was a complete surprise to the resubmissionists. They protested, styling it an insult to the senate and "a damnable outrage on the people," moved a call of the house and voted against suspending the call, even after all were found present or excused. Various other dilatory motions were made with no wavering in the anti-resubmission lines, excepting that Edwards and Sveusrud once voted with them on collateral issues. The resolution was indefinitely postponed.

CASH FOR SISSETONS.

Special Agent Shelby Ordered to Disburse $200,000.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 12.—Special Agent Shelby of the Indian office has been ordered to the Sisseton agency to disburse the money recently allowed to the Indians of that agency, amounting to about $200,000. There will be another enrollment of the Indians and the payment is likely to be delayed for some time, but the credit of the Indians will be so strengthened by the prospect of payment that they will be able to get through the winter.

LEXOW'S AMBITION.

He of Investigation Fame Wants to Be Governor of New York.

NEW YORK, Feb. 12.—The World says: Senator Lexow has set the stakes of his ambition. He wants to be the next Republican candidate for governor. He announced himself to a party of friends at the Hotel Metropole recently, and one of the gentlemen present is authority for the statement that the Nyack statesman pounded the table and declared "the people of this state are with me, and will be with me, Parkhurst or no Parkhurst."

BISSELL'S RESIGNATION.

The Rumor That He Will Quit Very Soon Is Revived—His Successor.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 12.—One of the many rumors concerning changes in the cabinet which are afloat again, seems in a fair way to be confirmed. It is stated upon authority that seems to be indisputable that General Tracy of Albany will succeed Postmaster General Bissell shortly after March 4, when the former's congressional term expires.

Land for Settlement.

PIERRE, S. D., Feb. 12.—Four million acres of Sioux Indian reservation land are now open for settlement by purchase at 50 cents an acre. This is under an act passed in 1889. Many intending settlers have filed claims and a great rush is looked for when spring opens.

THE WORK OF CONGRESS

Tuesday, Feb. 5.

The District of Columbia appropriation bill was passed by the senate after having been before it more than a week, and discussion of the diplomatic and consular bill was begun.

The debate on the administration bill to authorize the issue of $500,000,000 gold bonds for the purpose of retiring the legal tender and treasury notes began in the house during the day and continued for six hours.

Wednesday, Feb. 6.

The Hawaiian question, and especially the Hawaiian cable, occupied the senate nearly all day. The diplomatic and consular bill, containing an item of $500,000 for a cable, was under consideration.

In the house the currency bill was under consideration. Several amendments were promptly voted down, including two proposed by the banking and currency committee.

Thursday, Feb. 7.

The house, after four days debate, has rejected the financial scheme of the president defeating the Springer bill for the issuance of $500,000,000 bonds and the retiring of treasury notes by a vote of 161 to 135. An analysis of the vote shows that 44 Republicans and 90 Democrats voted for the bill, and 56 Republicans 97 Democrats and 8 Populists voted against it.

The senate continued the discussion of the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill, the Hawaiian cable being the main topic.

Friday, Feb. 8.

Discussing and filibustering on an appropriation to allow congressmen clerks at $1,200 per annum, brought forward as an amendment to the legislative appropriation bill, retarded material progress on the measure in the house. President Cleveland's message advising congress of an arrangement to sell $62,400,000 4 per cent bonds was received with slight applause on the Democratic side.

The senate discussed the diplomatic and consular bill.

Saturday, Feb. 9.

The house in committee of the whole favorably reported a bill to give congressmen $100 a month for clerk hire. The motion to strike out the civil service commissions appropriation was lost.

The senate passed the diplomatic and consular appropriation with an item of $500,000 for a Hawaiian cable.

Monday, Feb. 11.

The legislative appropriation bill, to which the house devoted the day, was completed save for the paragraph relating to the pension offices. Several amendments were agreed to, among them to allow the public printer to bid for the work of publishing the Patent Office Gazette, to allow courts of appeal to use only the surplus fees of the clerks of said courts for the purchase of law books, to establish a refinery at Helena, Mon., and to refer the claims of the Cherokee Nation for moneys due under early treaties to the attorney general for review. A bill to provide for coinage at the branch mint at Denver was passed.

Most of the day in the senate was spent on the postoffice bill, a spirited contest being made against the amendment giving the postmaster general discretion in expending $3,300,000 for railway postal routes.

LA GASCOGNE IN PORT.

The Big French Liner Arrives After a Sixteen Days Voyage.

QUARANTINE, Feb. 12.—La Gascogne, the long overdue French steamship, limped into port with three red lights hanging from her mizzen mast as a signal that she was disabled. Her passengers were all on deck, some of them singing and most of them cheering, as persons are wont to do when their minds are suddenly relieved of a heavy strain. For 13 days of a voyage lasting 16 days the ship had been disabled, one of her main piston rods having broken on her third day out from Havre.

La Gascogne left Havre on the morning of Jan. 26. There were 30 passengers in the first cabin, 14 in the second cabin and 118 in the steerage.

STATE LEGISLATURE

TWENTY-NINTH BIENNIAL SESSION

Tuesday, Feb. 5.

SENATE—In executive session the nominations of Labor Commissioner Powers and Dairy Commissioner Anderson were confirmed.

Senator Stebbins, from the committee on hospitals for the insane, reported for passage S. F. 100, creating a commission to acquire a site for a fourth hospital for the insane.

The resolution providing for the appointment of three representatives and two senators as a commission to confer with a similar commission from North Dakota for the purpose of securing lower freight rates for grain and coal was adopted.

HOUSE—The committee on legislative expenses made another record for economy by using one clerk for several committees.

A report from the committee on grain and warehouses recommends the exemption of 100 bushels of wheat. Some minor measures on the calendar were passed.

Wednesday, Feb. 6.

HOUSE—The house devoted almost the entire day to the Allen-Furlong contest from Mower county. Chairman Jones of the committee on elections explained the report of the committee and the manner in which the conclusions in favor of Furlong were reached.

At the conclusion of the arguments Mr. Gibbs moved the previous question, and the resolution to unseat Furlong was voted upon with the result of 71 negatives and 32 affirmatives. The committee's resolution to seat Furlong was then put and carried by a vote of 77 to 23.

SENATE—Quite a number of new bills were introduced. The one of the most general importance was Senator Potter's anti-trust bill. It is modeled after the national anti-trust law and a similar law which is in effect in Iowa. Another important measure was Senator Sheehan's salary bill. This bill provides for placing all city and county officers in the state, in cities of 40,000 inhabitants and over, and in counties of 50,000 and over, on salaries, and for the payment of all fees into the city or county treasury, as the case may be. The act is to go into effect Jan. 1 next.

Thursday, Feb. 7.

SENATE—Senator Johnson of Minneapolis is after the officers of the state institutions who buy from parties outside of the state supplies for their institutions which can be purchased to as good and even better advantage at home. In the senate he introduced a resolution providing for the appointment of a committee of three senators to investigate the charges that the steward of the Rochester insane asylum has been purchasing goods from parties outside of the state which might as well be purchased here. The resolution went over under notice of debate. The house bill, making Feb. 12 a legal holiday, was passed.

HOUSE—The judiciary committee reported on the report of Attorney General Childs on the initiative and referendum. The report agreed with the attorney general in that to adopt the referendum might lead to "greater evils than those it would suppress," and hence present action would be inadvisable. The house adopted the committee's report and the suggestion that the communication of the attorney general be ordered printed on the journal.

Anderson's bill to tax unused railroad lands was recommended to pass.

Friday, Feb. 8.

HOUSE—The house passed eight bills, among them the Anderson railroad tax bill and the Robbins bill to prohibit wrongful practices by officials of the state; or, in other words, to forbid state officials taking the state's time in which to dabble in politics.

Twenty-three bills were introduced in the house during the day. Representative Wright sent up one to prevent employers from keeping a blacklist and making the penalty a heavy fine or imprisonment. Another bill, fathered by Representative Smith, provides for an appropriation to aid farmers who lost their crops in the storms of 1894.

SENATE—A bill was passed in the senate prohibiting pool rooms within a mile of the state university. Nine bills in all went through, among them one relating to the liability of husband and wife for labor performed by domestics.

The nomination of H. W. Foote as inspector of illuminating oils was confirmed.

Nineteen bills were introduced, among them one to prohibit the display of foreign flags on public buildings.

Saturday, Feb. 9.

SENATE—The bill prohibiting all pool selling, bookmaking or betting on the races passed without opposition. The bill designed to reverse the Rand ordinance of Minneapolis, which allows only police officers to complain of violations of the liquor and gambling laws, was passed after some opposition. The judiciary committee did not know exactly what to do with Senator Ozmun's anti-foreign flag resolution. The thing seemed loaded at both ends; so, after wrestling with it for a short time, its consideration was postponed. The bill appropriating $250,000 for the payment of bonds issued in 1889 was also passed.

HOUSE—In the house 21 new bills were introduced and five measures were advanced from general orders to the calendar. The curative Lincoln holiday act was passed under suspension of the rules, and the new capitol bill was referred to the appropriation committee. Dr. Robillard's bill prohibiting the transfer of liquor licenses and limiting the number that may be issued to one to each person was recommended to pass.

Monday, Feb. 11.

HOUSE—The house took up the calendar during the morning and passed Senator Wyman's bill appropriating $60,000 for deficiency in the salaries of supreme and district court judges, and Mr. Cant's bill for the adjustment of municipalities and quasi-municipalities annexed to cities. Dr. Robillard's bill prohibiting the transfer of liquor licenses was passed by a vote of 56 to 18. The bill, as amended, provides for a rebate on the death of the licensee. Mr. Ferris' bill to legalize the incorporation of certain villages was passed unanimously, and Mr. Staples' bill making an appropriation for the publication of the proceedings of the Minnesota Educational association passed in the same way.

Mr. Schurmeier's bill for a constitutional amendment prohibiting foreign born residents from voting until they have taken out their second papers and become full citizens, was taken up and after slight amendment was recommended to pass.

It is one of the most important bills recommended in a Minnesota legislature for many years, and is so regarded by the members.

The house adjourned until Wednesday.

My Wife is Nervous

Says many a man and too often he is inclined to blame the poor, tired woman who cannot eat or sleep, whose whole life is filled with misery because her blood has become impoverished and her nervous system exhausted. She needs a building up medicine like Hood's Sarsaparilla. A few bottles will enrich and vitalize her blood, tone and strengthen her digestive organs, give her a good appetite, enable her to sleep soundly, banish her nervousness and bring back her smiles. Mr. J. W. Roberson, of Greenfield, Tenn., says: "My wife began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla about three months ago and she is now taking her third bottle. She has been in poor health for fifteen years. Hood's Sarsaparilla is doing her more good than any other medicine she has ever taken. Her appetite is better, she looks better and there has been improvement in every way."

FOUR ARE SENTENCED

LEADERS OF THE HAWAIIAN REBELLION FOUND GUILTY.

Treason Was the Charge—Many Others Convicted but Not Yet Sentenced—The Queen's Trial Comes Next, and Officials Claim to Have Evidence to Convict.

VICTORIA, B. C., Feb. 11.—Hawaiian advices by steamer Warrimoo to Feb. 2: There is a lull in affairs here and quiet will probably reign until the military court now sitting will have finished its work. There are a large number of conspiracy cases yet to be tried and the probabilities are that the court will sit for two or three weeks at least. Great interest is attached to the forthcoming trial of the ex-queen. The government claims to have more than sufficient evidence to convict her. What her punishment will be in case of conviction is hard to conjecture. Her case will probably come up on next Monday. She is charged with treason.

Findings in Twenty-four Cases.

The military commission has brought in findings in 24 cases. Of this number two were acquitted. The others were all found guilty and sentences were fixed by the commission subject to review by President Dole. The sentences vary much, all the way from sentence of death to imprisonment for five years, treason by the Hawaiian statutes is imprisonment for five years and a fine of not less than $5,000. The six leaders were all sentenced to be hanged. They are Charles T. Gulick, William H. Rickard, William S. Seward, Robert W. Wilcox, Sam Nowlein and Henry Bertelman. Sentence in the last two cases will be commuted, as both men have for the government. Gulick was born in this country. Rickard is an Englishman. Wilcox is a Hawaiian. The only with fines.

Furnished Valuable Evidence

Rumor of a Protectorate.

SAN FRANCISCO, Feb. 11.—The Examiner prints a story from its correspondent at Honolulu to the effect that Admiral Beardsley has taken possession of Pearl harbor and declared a protectorate over the Hawaiian Islands. The news came to Victoria by the steamer Warrimoo.

QUEEN ABDICATES.

Liliuokalani Resigns All Rights in Favor of the Republic.

HONOLULU, Jan. 30, via San Francisco, Feb. 9.—Liliuokalani has abdicated in favor of the republic. This is by far the most important outcome of the late rebellion. The document was drawn up by A. S. Hartwell at the request of the ex-queen. It was presented on the 26th inst. to President Dole. The document, according to the wording, was executed freely and voluntarily.

Stevens Is Dead.

AUGUSTA, Me., Feb. 9.—Hon. John L. Stevens, ex-minister to Hawaii, is dead.

INDEFINITELY POSTPONED.

North Dakota House Defeats Resubmission by a Ruse.

BISMARCK, N. D., Feb. 11.—When the order of messages from the senate was reached in the house and Haggert's resubmission resolution was read, Cooper moved that it be indefinitely postponed. The motion was a complete surprise to the resubmissionists. They protested, styling it an insult to the senate and "a damnable outrage on the people," moved a call of the house and voted against suspending the call, even after all were found present or excused. Various other dilatory motions were made with no wavering in the anti-resubmission lines, excepting that Edwards and Svensrud once voted with them on collateral issues. The resolution was indefinitely postponed.

CASH FOR SISSETONS.

Special Agent Shelby Ordered to Disburse $200,000.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 12.—Special Agent Shelby of the Indian office has been ordered to the Sisseton agency to disburse the money recently allowed to the Indians of that agency, amounting to about $200,000. There will be another enrollment of the Indians and the payment is likely to be delayed for some time, but the credit of the Indians will be so strengthened by the prospect of payment that they will be able to get through the winter.

LEXOW'S AMBITION.

He of Investigation Fame Wants to Be Governor of New York.

NEW YORK, Feb. 12.—The World says: Senator Lexow has set the stakes of his ambition. He wants to be the next Republican candidate for governor. He announced himself to a party of friends at the Hotel Metropole recently, and one of the gentlemen present is authority for the statement that the Nyack statesman pounded the table and declared "the people of this state are with me, and will be with me, Parkhurst or no Parkhurst."

BISSELL'S RESIGNATION.

The Rumor That He Will Quit Very Soon Is Revived—His Successor.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 12.—One of the many rumors concerning changes in the cabinet which are afloat again, seems in a fair way to be confirmed. It is stated upon authority that seems to be indisputable, that General Tracy of Albany will succeed Postmaster General Bissell shortly after March 4, when the former's congressional term expires.

Land for Settlement.

PIERRE, S. D., Feb. 12.—Four million acres of Sioux Indian reservation land are now open for settlement by purchase at 50 cents an acre. This is under an act passed in 1889. Many intending settlers have filed claims and a great rush is looked for when spring opens.

THE WORK OF CONGRESS

Tuesday, Feb. 5.

The District of Columbia appropriation bill was passed by the senate after having been before it more than a week, and discussion of the diplomatic and consular bill was begun.

The debate on the administration bill to authorize the issue of $500,000,000 gold bonds for the purpose of retiring the legal tender and treasury notes began in the house during the day and continued for six hours.

Wednesday, Feb. 6.

The Hawaiian question, and especially the Hawaiian cable, occupied the senate nearly all day. The diplomatic and consular bill, containing an item of $500,000 for a cable, was under consideration.

In the house the currency bill was under consideration. Several amendments were promptly voted down, including two proposed by the banking and currency committee.

Thursday, Feb. 7.

The house, after four days debate, has rejected the financial scheme of the president defeating the Springer bill for the issuance of $500,000,000 bonds and the retiring of treasury notes by a vote of 161 to 135. An analysis of the vote shows that 44 Republicans and 90 Democrats voted for the bill, and 56 Republicans 97 Democrats and 8 Populists voted against it.

The senate continued the discussion of the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill, the Hawaiian cable being the main topic.

Friday, Feb. 8.

Discussing and filibustering on an appropriation to allow congressmen clerks at $1,200 per annum, brought forward as an amendment to the legislative appropriation bill, retarded material progress on the measure in the house. President Cleveland's message advising congress of an arrangement to sell $62,400,000 4 per cent bonds was received with slight applause on the Democratic side.

The senate discussed the diplomatic and consular bill.

Saturday, Feb. 9.

The house in committee of the whole favorably reported a bill to give congressmen $100 a month for clerk hire. The motion to strike out the civil service commissions appropriation was lost.

The senate passed the diplomatic and consular appropriation with an item of $500,000 for a Hawaiian cable.

Monday, Feb. 11.

The legislative appropriation bill, to which the house devoted the day, was completed save for the paragraph relating to the pension offices. Several amendments were agreed to, among them to allow the public printer to bid for the work of publishing the Patent Office Gazette, to allow courts of appeal to use only the surplus fees of the clerks of said courts for the purchase of law books, to establish a refinery at Helena, Mon., and to refer the claims of the Cherokee Nation for moneys due under early treaties to the attorney general for review. A bill to provide for coinage at the branch mint at Denver was passed.

Most of the day in the senate was spent on the postoffice bill, a spirited contest being made against the amendment giving the postmaster general discretion in expending $3,300,000 for railway postal routes.

LA GASCOGNE IN PORT.

The Big French Liner Arrives After a Sixteen Days Voyage.

QUARANTINE, Feb. 12.—La Gascogne, the long overdue French steamship, limped into port with three red lights hanging from her mizzen mast as a signal that she was disabled. Her passengers were all on deck, some of them singing and most of them cheering, as persons are wont to do when their minds are suddenly relieved of a heavy strain. For 13 days of a voyage lasting 16 days the ship had been disabled, one of her main piston rods having broken on her third day out from Havre.

La Gascogne left Havre on the morning of Jan. 26. There were 30 passengers in the first cabin, 14 in the second cabin and 118 in the steerage.

STATE LEGISLATURE

TWENTY-NINTH BIENNIAL SESSION

Tuesday, Feb. 5.

SENATE—In executive session the nominations of Labor Commissioner Powers and Dairy Commissioner Anderson were confirmed.

Senator Stebbins, from the committee on hospitals for the insane, reported for passage S. F. 106, creating a commission to acquire a site for a fourth hospital for the insane.

The resolution providing for the appointment of three representatives and two senators as a commission to confer with a similar commission from North Dakota for the purpose of securing lower freight rates for grain and coal was adopted.

HOUSE—The committee on legislative expenses made another record for economy by using one clerk for several committees.

A report from the committee on grain and warehouses recommends the exemption of 100 bushels of wheat. Some minor measures on the calendar were passed.

Wednesday, Feb. 6.

HOUSE—The house devoted almost the entire day to the Allen-Furlong contest from Mower county. Chairman Jones of the committee on elections explained the report of the committee and the manner in which the conclusions in favor of Furlong were reached.

At the conclusion of the arguments Mr. Gibbs moved the previous question, and the resolution to unseat Furlong was voted upon with the result of 71 negatives and 32 affirmatives. The committee's resolution to seat Furlong was then put and carried by a vote of 77 to 23.

SENATE—Quite a number of new bills were introduced. The one of the most general importance was Senator Potter's anti-trust bill. It is modeled after the national anti-trust law and a similar law which is in effect in Iowa. Another important measure was Senator Sheehan's salary bill. This bill provides for placing all city and county officers in the state, in cities of 40,000 inhabitants and over, and in counties of 50,000 and over, on salaries, and for the payment of all fees into the city or county treasury, as the case may be. The act is to go into effect Jan. 1 next.

Thursday, Feb. 7.

SENATE—Senator Johnson of Minneapolis is after the officers of the state institutions who buy from parties outside of the state supplies for their institutions which can be purchased to as good and even better advantage at home. In the senate he introduced a resolution providing for the appointment of a committee of three senators to investigate the charges that the steward of the Rochester insane asylum has been purchasing goods from parties outside of the state which might as well be purchased here. The resolution went over under notice of debate. The house bill, making Feb. 12 a legal holiday, was passed.

HOUSE—The judiciary committee reported on the report of Attorney General Childs on the initiative and referendum. The report agreed with the attorney general in that to adopt the referendum might lead to "greater evils than those it would suppress," and hence present action would be inadvisable. The house adopted the committee's report and the suggestion that the communication of the attorney general be ordered printed on the journal.

Anderson's bill to tax unused railroad lands was recommended to pass.

Friday, Feb. 8.

HOUSE—The house passed eight bills, among them the Anderson railroad tax bill and the Robbins bill to prohibit wrongful practices by officials of the state; or, in other words, to forbid state officials taking the state's time in which to dabble in politics.

Twenty-three bills were introduced in the house during the day. Representative Wright sent up one to prevent employers from keeping a blacklist and making the penalty a heavy fine or imprisonment. Another bill, fathered by Representative Smith, provides for an appropriation to aid farmers who lost their crops in the storms of 1894.

SENATE—A bill was passed in the senate prohibiting pool rooms within a mile of the state university. Nine bills in all went through, among them one relating to the liability of husband and wife for labor performed by domestics.

The nomination of H. W. Foote as inspector of illuminating oils was confirmed.

Nineteen bills were introduced, among them one to prohibit the display of foreign flags on public buildings.

Saturday, Feb. 9.

SENATE—The bill prohibiting all pool selling, bookmaking or betting on the races passed without opposition. The bill designed to reverse the Rand ordinance of Minneapolis, which allows only police officers to complain of violations of the liquor and gambling laws, was passed after some opposition. The judiciary committee did not know exactly what to do with Senator Ozmun's anti-foreign flag resolution. The thing seemed loaded at both ends; so, after wrestling with it for a short time, its consideration was postponed. The bill appropriating $250,000 for the payment of bonds issued in 1889 was also passed.

HOUSE—In the house 21 new bills were introduced and five measures were advanced from general orders to the calendar. The curative Lincoln holiday act was passed under suspension of the rules, and the new capitol bill was referred to the appropriation committee. Dr. Robillard's bill prohibiting the transfer of liquor licenses and limiting the number that may be issued to one to each person was recommended to pass.

Monday, Feb. 11.

HOUSE—The house took up the calendar during the morning and passed Senator Wyman's bill appropriating $56,000 for deficiency in the salaries of supreme and district court judges, and Mr. Cant's bill for the adjustment of municipalities and quasi-municipalities annexed to cities. Dr. Robillard's bill prohibiting the transfer of liquor licenses was passed by a vote of 56 to 18. The bill, as amended, provides for a rebate on the death of the licensee. Mr. Ferris bill to legalize the incorporation of certain villages was passed unanimously, and Mr. Staples' bill making an appropriation for the publication of the proceedings of the Minnesota Educational association passed in the same way.

Mr. Schurmeier's bill for a constitutional amendment prohibiting foreign born residents from voting until they have taken out their second papers and become full citizens, was taken up and after slight amendment was recommended to pass.

It is one of the most important bills recommended in a Minnesota legislature for many years, and is so regarded by the members.

The house adjourned until Wednesday.

My Wife is Nervous

Says many a man and too often he is inclined to blame the poor, tired woman who cannot eat or sleep, whose whole life is filled with misery because her blood has become impoverished and her nervous system exhausted. She needs a building up medicine like Hood's Sarsaparilla. A few bottles will enrich and vitalize her blood, tone and strengthen her digestive organs, give her a good appetite, enable her to sleep soundly, banish her nervousness and bring back her smiles. Mr. J. W. Roberson, of Greenfield, Tenn., says: "My wife began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla about three months ago and she is now taking her third bottle. She has been in poor health for fifteen years. Hood's Sarsaparilla is doing her more good than any other medicine she has ever taken. Her appetite is better, she looks better and there has been improvement in every way."

CHAPTER III.

A DEVOTED CONFEDERATE.

On the morning of the general advance of the Army of the Cumberland a drizzling rain set in which lasted at intervals during the whole campaign. Day after day the men tramped through the mire, often to lie down at night with no means of lifting themselves out of pools except by cutting the wet branches from the trees, and on these making a bed in drenched clothes. The artillery soon cut up the roads so that the guns sank to the hubs of the wheels. The right continued to march toward the left and in the direction of the base of the Cumberland plateau, where Miss Betsy Baggs and the others were passing between the lines. The Unionists were moving upon gaps in the foothills held by the Confederates, and necessary to the latter to prevent their enemies getting on their right, and thus compelling them to leave their fortifications at Tullahoma and fight on open ground.

It was the day that the Union men attacked these gaps that Miss Baggs passed under Confederate protection, and the farmer and the two young people with him were also pursuing their route south. Fortunately for him, the farmer, being on the flank of the two armies, was not forced to pass over roads cut up by either. After Major Burke had administered the oath not to divulge anything they had seen concerning the Union forces to the farmer and the young girl in the wagon with him (he considered the boy too young to treat in the same way), the party were suffered to depart and proceeded down the road.

"Jake," said the farmer, slapping the horses' backs with the reins, "what hev you l'arned at skule?"

"L'arned how ter play 'hop scotch' and 'shinny.'"

"I don't mean thet kind. I mean real l'arnin."

"Jakey was at a great disadvantage, pa," remarked the girl on the rear seat, "because he was obliged to go in classes with little bits of boys. You remember he didn't know his letters when he went to school."

"No more did you," said the father.

"Oh, yes, I did. I began to study them a month before I went away, and I taught Jakey, so that he knew something about them, too, when he got there."

"Air they doin much talkin 'bout the war up no'th?"

"Well, it isn't at all like it is down hyar" (no southerner will ever change the pronunciation of this word). "They take lots of interest in it, and all that; but, laws, it's one thing to get up in the morning and read the papers 'bout battles and such things, and another to have soldiers running all over you, 'specially taking the garden truck and the horses outen the barn—I mean out of the barn. Teacher, she had the hardest work to break me from saying 'outen' for 'out of.' It seems she hasn't quite done it yet." She spoke the last words with a sigh.

"Lordy, Souri, y' talk like a fine lady compared 'ith what y' did afore y' went no'th. Jake, would y' like ter drive 'em?"

"Reckon."

The father handed the reins to his son, who, considering that he had not driven a horse for a year, handled them with considerable skill.

"How did you leave ma?" asked the daughter.

"Waal, y'r maw she war a heap lonesome 'thout y' uns, and she's been a worritin fo' fear y'd git sick up thar 'ith no one ter tend ter y', but sence the time fo' y'r comin hum hez drawed nigh she's puckered up pretty peart."

The boom of a gun came faintly from far down on the lower level, and the cannonading heard by Corporal Ratigan and his charge began. Taking up the whip, the countryman gave his horses a cut.

"I want ter make hum afore somep'n happens. Thar's goin ter be a big fight 'bout Tullyhoomy. Thar's forts all round the place and big guns on em."

The horses trotted on briskly for a short distance, when, looking ahead, the farmer could see the picket post. He got his pass ready, and when they reached the post an officer came out to examine it.

"Is your name Ezekiel Slack?" he asked of the farmer.

"Zeke Slack; yaas, thet's my name."

"And yours?" to the girl, raising his forage cap admiringly.

"Missouri Slack."

"The other name on the pass refers to the boy, I suppose. You have a name, sonny, haven't you?" he asked absently, while he was studying the pass, though it is questionable if the inquiry was not intended to show some facetiousness before the pretty girl.

"Hev I got ha'r?"

"Oh, Jakey," said his sister, "don't fall back into thet habit of asking questions instead of answering them. You know how hard they tried to break you of it at school. And say 'heir,' not 'ha'r.'"

"I got a name," said Jake. "D'y' reckon a boy 14's a goin ter git on 'ithout a name?"

"Well, what is it?" asked the officer, smiling.

"Jake."

"Jake what?"

"Slack," answered the farmer. "These two une is my children. They been ter skule up in Ohio. They got lots o' l'arnin. Reckon they'll down the old man."

"Union or Confederate sympathies?"

"Union."

"All right. Go ahead."

Leaving the picket, they came to an opening in the country which enabled them to get a view of the region lying to the west. The farmer, though desirous of getting on, could not resist a temptation to rein in his horses and watch the fighting, or the distant evidences of it, that morning going on at Hoover's Gap. Volleys of musketry were mingled with the deeper tones of cannon. Then the firing ceased for awhile, when the booms began again, continued and rapid. A white smoke rose above a ridge on which Confederate cannons were shelling the advancing Union troops on the ground below. Souri Slack thought of the lives that were passing from under that smoke and covered her face with her hands.

When the sounds ceased, Farmer Slack drove on and soon reached the Confederate picket. The party were sent in charge of a trooper to the headquarters of an officer commanding a body of cavalry on the Confederate extreme left. His headquarters were in a house beside the road. It had once been in the center of a neat country place. The fences, the outhouses, the walks, had all been in excellent condition prior to the first passage of troops. Now of the fences there was an occasional upright post left; the walks were overgrown with weeds and grass; the outhouses had nearly all been torn down. The place was a picture of desolation. Nevertheless the general who temporarily resided there was making himself very comfortable.

The wagon drew up before the house, and the conducting trooper sent in word to the general that a party, who had come in from the Union lines, were waiting outside, desiring permission to go on south. An order came to send the party all inside.

The three travelers entered the house to find a tall man with an iron gray beard reclining in a rocking chair with as much apparent unconcern as if war were simply a pastime.

"You have just come from the enemy's lines, I hear," he said to the farmer.

"Yaas, sir."

"What force did you see in the region through which you passed?"

The farmer explained that he could not answer the question, inasmuch as he had been permitted to pass after taking an oath not to give any information.

"H'm. You are quite right not to answer under the circumstances," observed the general. "Did your daughter take the same oath?"

"Yaas, general," said Souri.

"Surely they didn't administer an oath to a boy of your age?" he said, turning to Jakey.

"Reckon th' thought I war too little to swar," said Jakey. He thrust his hands in his pockets, a sure sign that he was steadying himself for a conflict of wits and words. But the general was not acquainted with the peculiar characteristics of Jakey Slack and prepared to question him as unconcernedly as he would pump water from a well.

"What route did you come?" he asked of the farmer.

"I met the children at Galletin," replied Slack. "I driv' 'em from thar through Lebanon and Liberty."

"Sonny," said the general, turning to Jakey, "did you pass any troops on the way?"

"Lots."

"Infantry?"

"What's thet?"

"Soldiers who walk and carry guns."

"Didn't see none o' them kind."

"Did you see any artillery?"

"Don't know what them uns air."

"Men with great big guns—cannon."

"No, sir. Didn't see no 'tillery."

"Then what you saw must have been cavalry."

"Didn't see none o' them uns nuther."

The general looked surprised.

"Then what did you see? That's all the arms of the service I ever heard of, and I am an old soldier."

"Critter companies."

"Oh, I see!" exclaimed the general, remembering the mountain Tennesseeans' name for cavalry. "How many soldiers belonging to the 'critter companies,' as you call them, did you see?"

"Waal, I counted 20, 'n thet's 'a fur as I got at countin in skule."

Souri was about to remind her brother that he had proved himself one of the best boys in the school at mental arithmetic, but desisted.

"H'm!" The general thought a moment and beat a reveille with his fingers on the arm of his chair.

"What were they doing within the Federal lines just before you left the outposts?"

"Waal, I only noticed one mea, 'n he war doin somep'n very partickeler."

"What was it?"

"He war lookin at the sky through a flat round thing whet looked like a big squashed apple."

"Not a fieldglass, was it?"

"No, sir. Reckon 'twasn't thet."

"Was the man of high rank?"

"Reckon he war. He had stripes on his arm."

"Tut, tut, he wore chevrons. He was only a noncommissioned officer. Can't you describe more nearly the object through which he was looking?"

"Waal, I think I hearn some'un call it a can—can"—

"Not a canteen?"

"Yes, thet's it."

The general looked sharply at the boy, who looked stolidly stupid. He determined to try another route through which to lead Jakey's infantile mind.

"Were the troops you saw in camp, or on the march, or in bivouac?"

"Don't know what thet ar' last air, but the trees 'n brush war so thick I couldn' see plain."

"Can't you tell me if you saw any infantry. Soldiers who walk and carry guns, you know?"

"I never looke at them kind o' sojers," replied Jakey contemptuously. "I only notices 'em when th're on critters' backs."

"That will do," said the general. Then, turning to a staff officer near him, he said:

"Captain, you may pass these people south," and added in an undertone: "Ride over to division headquarters and say that nothing has yet been obtained of the enemy's movements in this vicinity by questioning citizens. Only one party has come through—a farmer, with his son and daughter. The farmer and his daughter took an oath not to give any information concerning the dispositions of the enemy, and the boy is profoundly stupid."

There was a sound of hoofs without, mingled with the rattle of wheels. Looking through an open window, an officer was seen to dismount and hand a woman from a mud covered, paint rubbed buggy. All recognized Miss Elizabeth Baggs. The general arose from his chair and went out to meet her at the front door. From there he conducted her into a room where they could confer together alone.

"What luck?"

"I struck their wires within their lines midway between Murfreesboro and MacMinnville at midnight, and no one was near. I threw my wire over the line and made my connections with my instrument. I waited till nearly daylight before any message of importance came along, though dispatches were passing all the while. At last one came in cipher. I took it down, but as we haven't the key I fear it will avail us nothing."

"Let me see it," said the general.

Miss Baggs handed him a piece of paper on which was written:

> MURFREESBORO, Tenn., June 28, 1863.
> Volunteers Garfield with circling between you possession turn an be cob Bumble at to got that possible by move Benjamin pony chief rapidity around that put of the hours ready shingle to notice enemy's Tullahoma your point the by of polliwog of plateau Niggard if desire and hope forward to haha move we right I command and mountain order staff.

The general read the dispatch over carefully, and then, looking up at Miss Baggs, remarked:

"Balked!"

"Can't it be interpreted, general?"

"I fear not without the key. It is doubtless an important dispatch, and I shall send it at once to general headquarters. If they can decipher it, they are welcome to do so. I don't care to try it."

Calling an aid-de-camp, the general bade him carry the message to the army telegraph station, a short distance to the rear, and repeat it to General Bragg.

"General," said Miss Baggs in an undertone, "if you will let me have the original or a copy, I will try to decipher it. I may find a clew that will aid me hereafter, though I fear it will be too late to take advantage of information contained in this one."

"Certainly. Lieutenant, return the dispatch I have given you to this lady after it has been repeated."

The officer departed. The general turned again to Miss Baggs with a serious look.

"Do you know that you are engaged in a very hazardous service?"

"Perfectly."

"And do you understand the penalty if caught?"

"Death, I suppose."

"There's no telling whether it would be death or a long imprisonment in the case of a woman. A man would hang."

Miss Baggs' countenance changed from an expression of indifference to one of those flashes of the superhuman attributes that lurk within the human soul.

"Am I to make anything of my life when thousands of the south's defenders are giving theirs every day? Have I not seen our homes laid desolate? Have I not seen my brothers, my friends, those I have loved, those I have played with as children, cut down by either bullet or disease? For months I have devoted myself to the care of the sick in the hospitals. There I learned to dread a long continuance of this struggle. There I conceived the idea of doing something to win success for our armies by giving them an advantage not possessed by the enemy. I consulted one high in rank. 'How can I give my life to the best advantage?' I asked. 'In the secret service.' 'Point the way.' 'Do you know anything of telegraphy?' 'No, but I can learn.' 'Go and study a month and then come to me.' For a month I studied night and day. I learned to read words from the clicking of the keys as readily as I can read letters. I returned to my adviser. You know the rest."

The general paced the floor with a clouded brow.

"I dread a catastrophe," he said, "in the case of one inspired by such noble sentiments. I dread to see a woman exposed to ignominy, perhaps death."

"If thet time comes, general, God will give me strength to bear it."

The general was silent a moment and then asked abruptly:

"Is your brother aware of what you are doing?"

"He is."

"And he consents?"

"He does not. We are individuals. He is one of the noblest of the south's legitimate defenders, but he is not responsible for my acts, one of its illegitimate machines."

"The pitcher that goes often to the well is at last broken."

"Then some one else will spring up to carry on the work."

"God grant that the day may be far distant—that it may never come. I can hardly approve of it, though you are working in my cause."

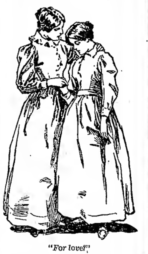
"General," said the woman, her face again lighting as if inspired by some absorbing thought, "each side has an organized secret service. What general would dare report to his government that he had acquired information which would enable him to destroy his enemy, but it had been obtained by illegitimate means, and he would not take advantage of it? Yet what general would care to be called a spy himself? We are engaged in a terrible struggle. Before its close any and all means will be used to conquer. Cities will be burned, vast districts will be laid waste. Must I cease to employ the most effective method of all because I am doing illegitimate work? Is my work more illegitimate than trying to conquer a people fighting for their independence?"

The general made no reply for a time.

"Yours is a singular family," he said presently. "You are all alike, and yet you differ."

"We are united in the cause; we differ as to the means."

The interview was interrupted by the ringing of a dinner bell in the hall. The general called a negro and bade him show Miss Baggs to a room up stairs, to which she retired for a few minutes. The servant brought in her belongings from the buggy, together with the little box. When she came down stairs, the party were waiting for her before going in to dinner. Souri, who had seen her covered by the sunbonnet and her eyes screened with glasses, was astonished. She saw a woman three or four years older than herself, the beauty of her head and neck contrasting with the homeliness of her costume. Miss Baggs noticed Souri's surprise, and going up to her took both her hands and kissed her cheek.



"For love?"

"You sweet child," she said feelingly, "you can't get over my appearance when you met me on the road this morning, can you? What a fright must I have seemed to you! I don't care for those Yankee officers, but bless your innocent heart I can't bear to have shocked you."

Souri did not reply in words, but she looked at Miss Baggs admiringly.

"Don't think hard of me," the latter went on, drawing Souri aside and motioning the rest to go on into the dining room. "I do only what I believe to be a duty, for you must suspect that I keep a secret. You could not play a part beneath you, child. You are too loving, too innocent, and you wonder how any other woman can."

"I did once."

"When?"

"Before I went to school."

"For your country?"

"No."

Miss Baggs looked into Souri's deep eyes and asked softly:

"For love?"

Souri dropped her eyes to the floor, but her questioner, who by this time had put an arm around her, received no reply.

"Come," she said, "let us not torture each other. I see we both have our secrets."

She led the way to the dinner room, where the general and his staff were standing waiting for the two women. The party were joined by Farmer Slack and Jakey, and all sat down at a signal from the general.

An Easy Way.

The main object of life is to derive satisfaction from it, the philosophers say. Therefore when you are what is commonly known as selfish and grasping you can silence your conscience by telling it that you are no worse than the unselfish and sacrificing. You simply have another method of enjoying life.—Exchange.

THE Zier bill to prevent the sale of patent medicines within the state is a pernicious measure and should be defeated.

The legislature recalled the act making Lincoln's birthday a legal holiday and re-enacted it to take effect in '96.

THE Winona papers announce the marriage of a Mr. Beard to Miss Susie Cross. Query: With a nice Beard, all her own, will she still continue to be Cross?

What Can Be Done for the Treasury.

There are two things that a well regulated legislative machine would have done without delay under such circumstances. First a bill would have passed authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to borrow, on such terms and in such a way as should be most advantageous, whatever sums of money are found necessary to meet the deficiencies of revenue and to maintain the credit of the government. Such a bill has been introduced in the Senate by Mr. Sherman. Second, a prompt means would have been found to bring the public revenue up to the line of the public expenditure. As our readers may remember, the most emphatic criticism passed by this magazine upon the Wilson bill as originally introduced, as also upon the Wilson-Gorman bill as finally passed, was based upon the ground that, although it purports to be a bill to provide public revenue, there was no apparent attempt at any stage in the proceedings to show that the measure was really framed with reference to supplying the amount necessary for the government's expenses. The whole discussion seemed to turn upon the extent to which Mr. Wilson and his fellow-Democrats in the two houses should cut down the high protective features of the McKinley act. High tariff schedules are by no means necessary for the purpose of raising revenue. The fundamental inconsistency of the Wilson bill lay in its rearrangement of the protective tariff without imposing any revenue duties upon the articles of the free list. Instead of taxing the free list, Mr. Wilson's great fight was for an extension of that list. And yet historically, the whole contention of the "tariff for revenue only,' men has been for customs taxes upon precisely such articles,—tea, coffee, raw sugar, etc.,—as are left upon our untaxed list. If Congress should now vote to collect a small revenue tariff of say five per cent, upon the free list, and should make a horizontal increase of five per cent in the duties upon all other imported articles, the result would not disturb business nor would there be any appreciable burden laid upon consumers. This five per cent, could be imposed for a short period either year by year or for a period of five years. It might be expected to yield $40,000,000 to $50,000,000 of revenue, without necessitating any new machinery of collection or any added expenditures. On the other hand it has been proposed to double the internal revenue tax upon beer. The tax is now one dollar per barrel, and the government collects about $30,000,000 a year from that source. The simple expedient of doubling the beer tax would bring an extra $30,000,000 into the treasury without any increase in the machinery or cost of collection. Nor would this added tax collected from the brewers come out of the pockets of the consumers; for the retail price of beer would not be affected in the least. These are simple proposals, and could be put into operation without the derangement of commerce or industry, and without affecting in any way the essential status of the tariff question as between the two political parties. On the contrary, the result would be relief and security for the public treasury, and improvement in the business situation in all quarters and circles.—From " The Progress of the World," February Review of Reviews.

To Prevent a Swindle.

Scott County Argus:- A good way to test a swindling scheme is to offer a non-negotiable note when the time comes for the note signing. Mark out the words " or order" or "bearer" which always follow the blank line in which is written the name of the one whom the note is given. Make the note payable to him and to him alone. That saves you all your rights. If the note is given in view of a contract which the other party offers just write on the note ahead of your signature these words, "The payment of this note is made conditional upon the performance of a certain contract for which it was given." Always member that no matter what oral contract you have, it will have nothing to do with the payment of a note unless it appears on the face of the note. You will never get an agent for any fake or swindling scheme to take a note payable only to him or referring to the contract he makes. It is not always a sign that a swindle is being attempted when a negotiable note is demanded; but in regard to dealing with strangers it may be safely said that you will win nine times where you will lose once by refusing to deal with them or their agents at all.

Good Horse Sense In Burros.

The Mexican burros ascertain where to dig for water by closely observing the surface of the ground. We had found in an arroyo a sufficient quantity of water to make coffee when we observed three burros searching for water. They possed several damp places, examining the ground closely, when the leader halted near us and commenced to paw a hole in the dry, hot sand with his right forefoot. After awhile he used his left forefoot. Having dug a hole something over a foot in depth, he backed out and watched it intently. To our surprise, it soon commenced to fill with water. Then he advanced and took a drink and stepped aside, inviting, I think, the others to take a drink. At all events they promptly did so and then went away, when we got down and took a drink from their well. The water was cool and refreshing—much better, in fact, than we had found for many a day. There is no witchcraft about the Mexican burros, but they have good horse sense.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

Feather Superstition.

We have long been acquainted with the peacock feather superstition, but were not aware until a few days ago that it extended to all feathered creatures. A young girl admired the beautiful pigeons strutting, cooing and sunning themselves in the covert of the house where she was boarding and asked the landlady to sell her a pair to take home with her. "No, indeed, child," was the immediate response. "Not for any money would I sell you those birds. When one person gives or sells an acquaintance a feathered thing, there is sure to be trouble between them, and I do not want to fall out with you."—Philadelphia Times.

No Doubt About It.

"Do you play by note?" inquired one of the summer residents of Bluesville of the violinist of the "Berry Corners' orchestra," which had been discoursing ear piercing strains at a lawn party.

"Nivver a note do Oi play by, sorr,' replied Mr. Flaherty, mopping his heated brow with a handkerchief of sanguinary hue.

"Ah, by ear, then?" said the summer resident, with a smile of gracious interest.

"Nivver an ear bilpe me, yer honor,' responded Mr. Flaherty, returning his handkerchief to his capacious pocket.

"Indeed! May I ask how you—what you do play by, then?" persisted the inquirer.

"By main strin'th, be jabbers," said Mr. Flaherty, with a weary air, as he plunged his ancient instrument into its green bag. "An it'a moighty dry wurrk, an that's thruth, sorr."—Youth's Companion.

NEW FIELDS FOR NOVELISTS.

Why Does Not Some Writer Use an Eskimo as Heroine?

The division of the earth among contemporary novelists has not as yet included Greenland, where some new writer can lay the scene of a story in which the heroine will wear sealskin trousers and calm her troubled heart with mighty drafts of train oil.

Neither has any novelist seized upon China, where great things may yet be done by a story teller who really knows something of that modern and multitudinous sphinx, the Chinaman.

But with these exceptions there is very little desirable territory which is not pre-empted. This of course greatly hampers new novelists who are compelled to write novels dealing only with English men and women at home.

England is the common possession of everybody, and even the American writer who does not wish to imitate either Mr. Harte or Mr. Howells is compelled to lay the scene of his stories in London or in some one of the many little English colonies to be found in continental cities.

The English novelist who wishes to write a story characterized by some little novelty is reduced to inventing Dodos or other fabulous creatures, an attempt which fails more frequently than it succeeds.

This state of things is so plain to every writer that I wonder that no one has rushed in to occupy the Greenland or the Chinese field.

A Greenland story would at once attract attention because of its novelty, and we who have never been to Greenland could warmly recognize the truth of its local color, and the profound knowledge of Eskimo character shown by the writer.

An advanced Eskimo maiden with a wild desire to wear petticoats instead of trousers and to drink tea instead of train oil could hardly fail to charm the reader.

I am afraid, however, that the advanced Eskimo maid would not survive beyond the first four or five chapters, for I understand that whenever an Eskimo woman exhibits symptoms of advanced thinking she is immediately set adrift on an ice floe—W. L. Alden in Idler.

BATHING IN THE DEAD SEA.

An Easy Matter to Float on the Surface of the Thick Water.

The Dead sea, or more properly the Salt sea, is also called in Scripture the sea of the Arabah; in the Apocrypha, the Sodomitish sea; in the Talmudical books, sea of Salt and sea of Sodom. The name Dead sea seems to have been first used in Greek, and the Arabic name is Bar Lut, or the sea of Lot. It has a length varying from 40 to 46 miles and is only about three miles across at its broadest part.

From the analysis of the United States expedition it appears that each gallon of the water, weighing 12¼ pounds, contains nearly 3½ pounds (3.319) of matter in solution, an immense quantity in view of the fact that sea water, weighing 10¼ pounds per gallon, contains less than one-half pound. Of this 3½ pounds nearly a pound is common salt (chloride of sodium), about two pounds chloride of magnesium and less than one-half pound chloride of calcium (muriate of lime). There does not appear to be anything about it inimical to life, and the story of a recent tourist confirms this. He says:

"As for the Dead sea, it will, in contradiction of the name, forever preserve a green and living memory in my mind. No fish can survive in it, we all know, but for a place for a swim, or, above all, for a float, commend me to it beyond all the Winnepesaukees in the world. How it bears you up in arms! How it annihilates the tiresome ponderosity and dignity of the laws of gravitation! How it introduces you into the inner consciousness of dainty ariel and thistledom and all other airy, fairy creatures! The more you weigh the less you weigh. There is the real hydrostatic paradox. An elephant in the Dead sea would feel himself a gazelle. Then what a mirror its steely surface was that morning, and how beautiful its reflections of the mountains of Palestine on the one hand and of Moab on the other!"—Brooklyn Eagle.

Electric Lights.

A Vienna professor gives it as his opinion, after much research on the subject, that all delicate persons and those who suffer from nervousness should never remain long in a room lighted by electric lights, its effect on the nervous system being such that after awhile they generally become uneasy and depressed and find it impossible to concentrate the attention for any length of time. Young persons, on the contrary, and those with strong nerves find the influence of the light extremely beneficial, especially when the brain is overworked and tired, the effect being much the same as that of strong coffee—i. e., increased activity of the nervous system.

Through Algerian Spectacles.

In a delightful paper before a club recently Mrs. Fannie C. Barbour, the writer and traveler, gave a description of her visit to some Algerian ladies. Through the interpreting friend who accompanied her the hostesses conveyed their polite pity at her extraordinary costume. "Where," they asked in plaintive pity for the unfortunate American, "are her Turkish trousers?" When told that she came from America, they asked where that was, and on hearing that it was across a great sea complacently remarked: "Not so great as our Mediterranean. There is no sea like that."

Food For Man and Beast.

"We read sometimes," said Mr. Billtops, "of people 'eagerly devouring' a newspaper, but horses sometimes do that literally. Twice lately I have seen horses eating newspapers. Perhaps this might come under the head of 'taking in every word.' "—New York Sun.

JAPANESE RITES.

Frederick Villiers Describes Funerals After the Battle of Ping-Yang.

Many of the sick and wounded who die are cremated. Their ashes are collected, placed in small square boxes, interred for a time in the little cemetery outside the foreign settlement at Chemulpo, and after awhile exhumed and sent to Japan. The ceremony I beheld in Chemulpo after the fight at Ping-Yang was not impressive or solemn, but simply curious. Eighty bodies had been cremated in various parts of the country and forwarded to the treaty port in small boxes. These were placed in two large, black cases at the hospital, and preceded by a motley group of coolies, citizens and soldiers were carried to the burial plot.

First came coolies with branches of foliage and white streamers in their hands. Then a few soldiers, marching with reversed arms. Immediately preceding the black cases was a Shinto priest in yellow kimono and a black gauze shako. Round his neck was a purple cord, at the end of which hung a fan. In his right hand was a flute, which from time to time as the procession wended its way he tooted on, producing an inharmonious sound which reminded me of my own attempts on that instrument when a boy. The coolies, the followers and the lookers on seemed to treat the whole thing more as a good joke than a solemn function and chatted and laughed to their hearts' content.

Arrived at the cemetery, the procession halted before the altar, on which were placed bottles of saki, fruits, eggs and birds of various kinds, including a live rooster. Behind this hospitable board were placed the remains of the 80 bodies. The Shinto priest, who stood alone before the edibles, stretched out his hands and made several passes with his fan in the direction of the rooster, groaned aloud, then clapped his hands three times, after which he indulged a little on the flute. Then he groaned again, straightened himself, retired a few paces, took several paces to the left and right, then advanced again, groaned and tooted. He then requested by a sign one of the mourners to advance and take his place.

He then handed one of the branches of foliage to the gentleman and retired. The mourner proceeded to lay the branch on a small table in front of the altar, then saluted and moved away to allow another mourner to take his place. When all the branches were piled on the table, the black cases were opened and the small square boxes taken out by the coolies and carefully interred. The Shinto priest retired to the bosom of his family, with the saki bottle, the live rooster and the rest of the chow. In lieu of tombstones, the Japs use, when campaigning, small wooden posts to mark the resting place of their dead.—Frederick Villiers.

A Quid Pro Quo.

He was only first consul then, and I was consul general—for the United States of course—and we were very intimate, notwithstanding the difference in rank, for I waived that. One day something offered the opening, and he said:

"Well, general, I suppose life can never get entirely dull to an American, because whenever he can't strike up any other way to put in his time he can always get away with a few years trying to find out who his grandfather was."

I fairly shouted, for I had never heard it sound better, and then I was back at him quick as a flash:

"Right, your excellency. But I reckon a Frenchman's got his little standby for a dull time, too, because when all other interests fail he can turn in and see if he can find out who his father was."

Well, you should have heard him just whoop and cackle and carry on. He reached over and hit me on the shoulder and said:

"Land, but it's good! It's immensely good! I George, I never heard it said so good in my life before. Say it again."

So I said it again, and he said his again, and I said mine again, and then he did, and then I did, and then he did, and we kept on doing it and doing it, and I never had such a good time, and he said the same. In my opinion there isn't anything that is as killing as one of those dear old ripe pensioners if you know how to snatch it out in a kind of a fresh sort of original way.—Mark Twain in North American Review.

American Cities a Hundred Years Ago.

When Washington was inaugurated, Philadelphia, then the metropolis of the country, had only about 42,000 people, New York but 33,000, Boston 18,000, Baltimore 13,000 and no other city anywhere near 10,000. Even after the lapse of half a century, during which New York had overtaken Philadelphia, so that in 1840 it had 312,000 inhabitants to the latter city's 258,000, Baltimore and New Orleans were the only other places with more than 100,000 people, and except Boston, with 93,000, all of the few remaining cities fell short of 50,000. During the formative period of the new nation, therefore, all but the merest fraction of its citizens lived in places of small population, the local affairs of which were easily administered through town meetings or other such simple machinery.—New York Post.

A Difference.

"You say you made money in business?"

"Certainly," replied the New York policeman.

"What was your stock in trade?"

"It wasn't a stock in trade. It was a trade in stock."—Washington Star.

During the reign of the second Edward an ox brought 13 shillings, a sheep 1 shilling, a pig 2 shillings, a rabbit 8 shillings, and pigeons were 6 cents a dozen.

TONIGHT.

Tonight I almost envy you
Your quiet bed that seems Too narrow for the coming in
Of any noise or dreams.

So when the earth is not too hard—
A moist and pleasant mold—
With dandelions here and there,
Like scattered bits of gold,

Then maybe I shall break my way
The earth and grasses through,
And smiling with my drowsy eyes
Shall come to sleep with you.

FAMOUS ENGLISH SWORDS.

Some Noticeable Weapons That Are Exhibited In the Tower of London.

Whoever visits the London Tower may enjoy a veritable feast of swords, but amid the numberless array of weapons there are one or two that are especially worthy of notice. There is the sword of state, which is girt on the monarch's side after his anointing at the imposing ceremony of coronation, which girding is more honored in the breach, one would suppose, when the monarch is a lady. The sword is first consecrated by the primate, and by him handed to the lord chamberlain, who completes the function. It is a two handed weapon, with rich decorations on hilt and pommel and scabbard. Of scarcely less importance is the "sword of mercy," borne before the sovereign in the coronation procession. This sword is named Curtana, but though undoubtedly very ancient it can hardly claim to be the original Curtana forged by the famous Munifican.

This original Curtano was the magic weapon of Ogier the Dane, bold knight of Charlemagne's most warlike days. Our own Curtana is in any case many centuries old. It is square pointed, with the look as though the point had been broken short; hence possibly its name. A fine gold wire covers its handle, and the scabbard is remarkably ornate. Two other swords are carried at the coronation ceremony—swords symbolical of spiritual and temporal justice, the first with an obtuse point, the latter sharp. Curtana and these two justice swords are not often called upon to make a public appearance. It is happily more than a half century since they were last required at a coronation, but whenever the sovereign opens parliament in person the sword of state first mentioned is called from its repose.

The lord mayor's sword is even more familiar to the general public, and not only London, but most other corporations, have their sword and sword bearer. It is a picturesque survival of the middle ages, which one would regret to see abolished—part of the ritual of state customs, which ritual is by no means meaningless. Public action must often be of a figurative character. Such is the mode by which the city of London sometimes does honor to those who have rendered the nation good service, presenting to them swords of honor. These civic swords have been given to men like Lord Napier, Lord Clyde, Lord Wolseley. Wellington received one in his day, and so did the Prussian Blucher.—London Standard.

Golf.

A game with a history of more than 400 years must necessarily have some interesting records. Golf has been greatly liked by kings. In the time of James I it was generally practiced by all classes. The unfortunate Charles I was devoted to golf. While on a visit in Scotland in 1641 as he was deeply engaged in a game news was brought him of the breaking out of a rebellion in Ireland, and the royal golfer threw down his club and retired in great agitation to Holyrood House. When he was imprisoned at Newcastle, his keeper kindly permitted him to take recreation on the golfing links with his train. It is said that Mary, queen of Scots, was seen playing golf in the field beside Seton a few days after the murder of her husband. In 1837 a magnificent gold medal was presented to St. Andrew's by William IV, to be played for annually. One of the earlier kings forbade the importation of golf balls from Holland because it took away "na small quantitie of gold and silver out of the kingdome of Scotland," and at one time "golfe and futeball and other unprofitable games" were forbidden in England because archery, so necessary in the defense of the nation, was being neglected in their favor.—Exchange.

The Hawaiian Islands.

The Hawaiian Islands have been found to be richer in animal life than was formerly supposed. As the result of a year's investigation by the British association, through its committee, it has been found that of birds there are 78 species, of which 57 are peculiar to this group. All the land and fresh water shells are peculiar, and of 1,000 species of insects 700 are not found elsewhere. It thus seems that these islands have by no means been populated from the continent, but have been centers of independent creation.—Independent.

How He Was Wounded.

Pension Agent—I see you have been drawing a pension on the wounded list when the record shows that you were drummed out of the army for desertion.

Pensioner—Yes. That is so.

Pension Agent—Well, how were you wounded?

Pensioner—My feelings, colonel, my feelings.—Atlanta Journal.

Negotiations Not Complete.

Customer (female and unfair)—I ordered ten yards of dress goods here yesterday to be sent. Has it been out yet?

Shopwalker—No indeed. The assistant said you hadn't been in yet to change your mind.—London Globe.

Whenever you see ingratitude you may as infallibly conclude that there is a growing stock of ill nature in the breast, as you may know that man to have the plague upon whom you see the tokens.

Niobrara, the name of a river in Nebraska, is said to mean "wide water."

'TWAS WINTER TIME.

A rose, a rose, a rich red rose
Upon my lady's breast,
Its petals large, its calyx deep,
Its stem with green leaves dressed.

'Tis rich with beauty, in color rare—
Oh, what a combination!—
The same as she whose smile on me
I see in adoration.

But the rose, the rose, the rich red rose
Which glows on her gown of gray
Is very scarce this time of year—
It cost my last week's pay.

A MAN'S BEST IDEAS.

An Old Student Says They Come Into the Mind Unexpectedly.

Professor von Helmholtz, the great German scientist of imperishable fame, not long before his death gave an interesting review of his life work on the occasion of the celebration of his seventieth birthday, in which, among other things, he reveals some instructive features of his habits of study and the process by which he won his ideas as well as the time and manner in which it was his wont to commit the latter to paper: "As it has frequently been my lot to have to await in uncertainty the arrival of appropriate thoughts and conceptions, which then would break suddenly and unheralded upon me, I have just gained some experience in the management of these capricious ideas. This may be of utility to other students of like physiological temperament.

"The best ideas have often stolen silently into the current of my thoughts while the latter were not employed in seeking them. I know not by what process of unconscious cerebration they were evolved. I only knew that they were there. Nor could I at first fully estimate the importance of such unexpected but welcome visitors.

"These ideas never introduced themselves when my brain was tired and almost never at my writing table. I had first to turn my problem in all directions and envisage it from every side, and thereafter to consign it to my involuntary thoughts without even prematurely attempting to solve it within myself or committing my reflections to writing. Long and patient preliminary investigation was the unconditional prerequisite to success.

"No matter how urgent the necessity for action, I must always give my brain its time to relax from fatigue or strain and await the recurrence of a feeling of both physical and mental well being and contentment before writing for publication. My most valuable ideas have presented themselves in the morning on my awakening from a refreshing sleep, but the favorite period for them has been while I was seeking relaxation by roaming slowly over picturesque hills or through wooded parks in the bright sunlight. The slightest indulgence in alcoholic beverages sufficed to banish them from my grasp."—Baltimore Sun.

The Uncle Tom's Cabin outfit at the opera house last Friday evening, is said to have been a good deal of a fraud—as the JOURNAL predicted it would be.

The village of Princeton, in Mille Lacs county is talking of putting up a pickle factory. This would be a good industry for Crookston to engage in.

St. Hilaire is taking steps to improve the water power at that place and expects to get some saw-mills. A young man in Lowell, Mass., troubled for years with a constant succession of boils on his neck, was completely cured by taking only three bottles of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Another result of the treatment was greatly improved digestion with increased avoirdupois.

Sunday morning opened the week with a bit of a snow-storm, giving indications that a warmer wave was coming. This indication was verified by the weather on Monday morning which was comparatively mild and pleasant.

To-night Rev. L. W. Squier lectures on Norway, at the M. E. church. This lecture is illustrated by new scenes that have just arrived and will be shown up by the stereopticon. Everybody, who cares a rye-straw for the success of the city should hear this lecture.

Remember the Brownies who will be out in force on Friday and Saturday evenings, Feb. 22d and 23d. The little chaps have worked faithfully and are deserving of a full house each night and Saturday matinee. You now have an opportunity for a display of enterprise by patronizing home industry.

Comrade A. Burnham entertained a host of his neighbors and friends at his hospitable farm residence in Andover on Friday evening of last week. A fine repast was served and all enjoyed a huge time until well along in the wee small hours of Saturday morning.

Owing to the prospects for high prices for potatoes next year, the many starch factories that are incubating in the state will hardly materialize as a factory can hardly afford to pay over 20 cents per bushel for potatoes and come out whole. Prospects are that potatoes will bring far more money than that.

H. B. Budd and J. J. Carey represented Beltrami county at the county seat on Saturday. Mr. Carey says he made money raising flax last year and will try it again the coming season. The past season was so dry he only got 13 bushels per acre, when he ought to have had 20 at at least.

Alex. Burnham, the succeseful Andover farmer, says he will plant more potatoes the coming season than ever before. He says that added to the shortage of the past year or so there are hundreds of bushels of potatoes in Polk county that are frozen solid in cellars this winter. The absence of snow allowed the ground to freeze to a greater depth than ever and cellars that had withstood all previous winters were no good for this kind of a winter and the result is frozen potatoes till you can't rest. Some will not have seed left. Added to this comes a report of dry rot which is said to be ruining potatoes by the wholesale. Everything indicates that potatoes will be a 'gilt-edged crop to raise next year.

Mr. McArty has just completed a very fine sample of this art, an enlarged copy from a photograph. Any one wanting work of this kind should call on him and see this sample of drawing.

The extreme cold weather of the past three weeks has seriously interferred with work in the school, certain rooms having necessarily been dismissed for half-day and whole days at a time owning to the inadequacy of the heating facilities. The board met last Saturday morning and decided to add a furnace which is being put in the basement this week and will be ready by next Monday for business. This will undoubtedly furnish all necessary heat for the coldest of weather in future.

ROMANY'S PRINCE WILLIAM.

He Lives Near East Hartford—His Tribe Are Noted Horse Trainers.

One of the most famous representatives of Romany Rys in this country is Prince William, as he is called, who, with his family, lives near East Hartford. There are branches of the family at New Haven and Bridgeport. The East Hartford branch of the family is the main branch.

The Williamses are all horse dealers. Attached to their residence are stables which, in winter, always contain a stock of fine blooded draft horses.

One of the interesting sights at the stables are the wagons that are used by Prince William and his family when they go off on their annual nomadic pleasure trips. These wagons cost from $1,000 to $2,500. Prince William's private wagon cost $2,500 and is fitted up in regal style.

In these trips around the country the whole family joins. These trips are made in the summer, spare horses being taken along and sold or traded. This means a cavalcade of a dozen fancy wagons and about 100 horses.

The start is made about the 1st of August, the entire family—men, women and children—being taken along. The party keeps together, traveling by easy stages, about 20 miles a day being considered a good journey. When in a hurry, they can make 40 miles a day.

The place selected for the night's rest is usually a grove. There the wagons are drawn up in a circle, fires are lighted and the evening meal prepared.

After supper the whole party gather around Prince William's tent or wagon, and the affairs of the family are discussed. A watchman patrols the camp all night to watch the horses.—New York Times.

Compound Rhyming Words.

In the south they have a very expressive phrase for one indifferently well—"frohly-mobly"—and to be in "mabble-fubble" signifies low spirits. In Leeds, when a person is overpowered with astonishment, he is said to be "much struck," a phrase forcible but scarcely polite. "Huck-muck" is an expression of like character, meaning foul, miry, and in Devonshire a bedraggled, besmirched person is said to be "muckson up to the huckson."

In Gloucestershire a wavering, unstable or worthless man is called a "meckle-keckle fellow," and it is worthy of remark that in Derbyshire poor ore is called "keckle-meckle." An awkward simpleton is called "haavey-gauvey" in the neighborhood of Leeds. In Warwickshire they style such a one as "hobgoblin," or else it is from "bob," a loaf, and "hog," a lump. "Gobbinshire" is the abode—"that never was writ in the traveler's chart"—of uncouth folk. They say of a slovenly loafer in south Cheshire:

Gobbinshire, Gobbinshire of Gobbinshire Green,
The rankest owd beggor as ever was seen.

—All the Year Around.

The Feast of Asses.

The Festum Asinorum, or feast of asses, was formerly held Jan. 14 to commemorate the flight into Egypt. There are still extant several rituals of this festival. One, of Beauvais, in France, orders the priest to bray three times and the congregation to resound each time in a similar manner. An ass, decorated with costly coverings, was led to the altar in a procession and with hymns of rejoicing.

A Modern Instance.

"Oh, of course," said the old man, "I don't blame you for taking the boy's part—it is just like a boy's mother to do so. But I'd think a heap more of him if there were less point to his shoes and more to his conversation."—Chicago Inter Ocean.

A GHOST OF A PLACE.

THE STORY OF ASHLEY HALL AND HOSPITABLE COLONEL BULL.

How the Planter Kept His Household Goods From the Hands of the "Raiders." Pictures of a Beautiful Suburb That All Visitors to Charleston Admire.

Woodlands thick with undergrowth, tranquil country stillness, the stillness of a bit of country comparatively untilled and unpastured; roadways lined with tall and stately trees—such the scene as the clatter of horses' hoofs echoing on the hard flooring of the river bridge dies away into noiseless footfalls and the wheels turn without sound in the yielding soil of St. Andrew's. The murmured chorus of countless pines charms us into forgetfulness of the city's close proximity across the river. Ahead the way unfolds to us, broad and smooth, winding between long battalions of ancient oaks, muffled up to their chins in gray; on through miles of the century old trees, their massive trunks bound with fibrous scarfs, as if to veil the scars of successive seasons, every twig and branch and spray hung with streaming moss. Grand old oaks! Autumnal storms and April airs in turns have tossed and kissed their rugged boughs, yet the giant trunks stand firm. Scarce a gap in the uniform line shows where a grenadier has fallen out of ranks, and, elbow to elbow, they guard the ancient highway from encroachment of forest or field.

Here is an old gateway, the entrance to the grounds which once surrounded Ashley Hall, one of the proudest and most spacious of the ancestral homes in this parish. We pass through the useless massive portals into the driveway beyond. In the shaded light the avenue seems dreaming of the past, for these great oaks stand guard over the wreck of all they were intended to adorn. Of the stately home to which their beauty formed a fit approach nothing now remains but the crumbling marble steps and tall, spirelike chimneys. Little pickaninnies play hide and seek where once the flowers in "my lady's garden" grew in trim luxuriance. Only the Ashley is unchanged as it ripples by on its way to the sea, its waves as blue and sparkling as when it bore many a boating party from the mansion house.

Ashley Hall was the scene of a munificent and lavish hospitality in antebellam days. Its owner possessed immense plantations in Mississippi and Louisiana in addition to his Carolina estates, and the great halls and spacious drawing rooms of the St. Andrew's mansion were frequently thronged with a gay company of the most distinguished people of the state. The host was passionately fond of the chase and delighted to assemble about him those who shared in his love of sport. Deer hunts, participated in by famous sportsmen from all over the south, were features of every season. The same open handed generosity that dictated a hospitality so marked obtained between master and slave, and the large retinue of servants at the hall were a happy, care free set. It was traditional that no one was ever sent away empty handed who applied for aid at the doors of this plantation home.

This old hall, in which seven generations of the same family had dwelt, living almost ideal lives, met with a tragic fate. The organized struggle between the north and south was at an end, but the "raiders" were in possession of this country. They had already sacked and destroyed every house in the parish, with a single exception, and that plantation was occupied by an enemy more dreaded even than demoralized soldiers—namely, smallpox. That frightened even rough handed rapacity away, and venerable Drayton Hall, today famous for its wonderful gardens, was preserved inviolate. The knowledge of the fate that had overtaken the homes of his neighbors, and which he felt that a few hours more would precipitate upon his own, determined Colonel Bull. Calling for kindling wood, surrounded by his awestricken servants, he himself applied the pine torch to his household gods. Pictures, plate, antique furniture, valued heirlooms—all were sacrificed save the small number which could be hastily secreted by trusted slaves when they learned of his intention. It is related by an eyewitness that the stalwart planter wept tears of infinite sorrow as the sounds of falling brick and crumbling woodwork smote upon his ears. Just back of the house is an ancient monument erected to commemorate one of Carolina's colonial governors, an ancestor of the doughty colonel. It was on the base of this shaft that the master of the manor sat and watched the destruction of his home.

We retrace our way along the ranks of rare old trees, passing through the ancient gateway, fit subject for poet's theme, into the open road, where we are greeted by a procession of oaks as symmetrical as those we left behind. Miles of moss fringed trees, their somber curtains swaying far above, and again drooping so as almost to touch the earth about their feet, continue even to the cleared strip of land immediately in front of the bridge. Opposite lies the city, her cluster turrets and slender spires outlined against the evening sky

Asked how we like the oaks, we say that they are "beautiful," but all the while we are conscious that they have a charm of their own not to be interpreted in words.—Cor. New York Post.

A Great Landowner.

A tourist was being driven over a part of the country in Ireland where his infernal majesty appeared to have given his name to all the objects of interest in the locality, for there was the Devil's bridge, the Devil's caldron, the Devil's glen, etc. Said the traveler:

"The devil seems to be the greatest landowner in these parts."

"Ah, sure, your honor," replied the jarvey, "that is so, but he lives in England. I think he's what they call an absentee landlord in Ireland."—London Gentlewoman.

THE MAGNETIC GIRL.

An Explanation of How Her Tricks May Easily Be Duplicated.

While in Chicago I saw the announcement of an electric girl who included in her repertory a new trick, or at least one that I had not yet seen. A stick about four feet long and as thick as a broomstick was produced, and I and another gentleman were requested to hold it in a vertical position before us while grasping it firmly in both hands. The girl, standing in front of and facing us, placed the palm of her open hand against the lower portion of the stick, resting it on the side nearest to us and farthest from herself. After rubbing her hand up and down for a few moments in order "to make better electric contact," as we were informed, and after enjoining us to hold the stick perfectly vertical, we were told to press down on it as hard as we could.

This we did until the veins seemed to stand out on our foreheads; but, exert ourselves as hard as we could, we, two strong men, were unable to press down hard enough to make the stick slip past the open palm of her hand. Had the girl grasped the stick with her two hands, I am sure she could not have withstood my downward pressure alone. I would have borne her, stick and all, to the floor. But there she stood, with but one open hand bearing against the side of the stick, and both us could not by our united efforts force the stick past that wonderful hand. Surely there seemed something uncanny about this But it is very simply explained.

The whole secret consists in insisting upon the men holding the stick in a vertical position. When the girl's open hand is first placed against the lower portion of the stick, she moves it two or three times up and down, pulling gradually more and more against it. As this tends to pull the stick away from the vertical, she insists that the men keep it straight. Thus cautioned, they will exert more and more effort until, when she feels that the pressure against her hand is sufficient, she instructs them to push down with all their might They do so and imagine that they are exerting a tremendous vertical thrust, whereas their vertical effort is actually very slight—insufficient even to overcome the friction of the stick against her moist hand. The men are really exerting a tremendous effort, but are deceived as to its direction. With their hands tightly grasping the upper end of the stick they are really trying to force the other end of the stick against the palm of her hand.—N. W. Perry in Cassier's Magazine.

WHY WOMEN MAKE POOR DETECTIVES

A Secret Service Man Says the Opposite Sex Make Bad Spies.

"Women are not good detectives," said an experienced secret service man on being asked his opinion. "To begin with, there are many places to which a woman cannot go without exciting suspicion, and this defeats her object at the outset, but beyond this woman is unfitted by nature for detective work.

"In the first place, she jumps at a conclusion and acts on it in opposition to all human probabilities, possibilities and reason. As a rule, a woman does not reason. She looks on a thing as she wants it to be or thinks it ought to be, end will follow that theory. She is led by prejudices, favors or sympathies, regardless of facts.

"As a detective she is sometimes a success in entrapping a man, but her work generally ends in a blunder which betrays her. She is persevering only when moved by passion. She does not look at a case dispassionately. She at once decides that he or she is guilty or innocent and works on that theory.

"A woman enjoys the mysterious, and she is so elated at her position as detective that she is unable to conceal her identity or the secret investigations of a case.

"Women are even failures in running down criminals of their own sex. A woman criminal will mislead a woman detective by working on her vanity, credulity or sympathy, and, worst of all, if the detective be attractive and the man criminal handsome—well, a man is better for detective work, and besides a woman will sell out a case, and cheaply at that, relying upon her sex to escape punishment if detected."—New York Herald.

Sickrooms.

A medical journal urges, sensibly enough, that in the present extravagant expenditure in house building a little money should be laid out in arranging for a sickroom, built on the sunny side and equipped with at least the simple means for isolation and care of a sick person. Ventilation should be well considered. The walls mey be of washable material—paint tiles or covered with waterproof bath paper. The plumbing should be out of but convenient to it. A little of the time and money invested in libraries, ballrooms and oriental parlors spent on an apartment whose use in an emergency not unusual to frail humanity may insure the comfort and safety to the family that is necessary to the enjoyment of the more luxurious rooms.

English Women's Shoes.

English women are teaching American women some important facts about footgear. We know today that a touch of patent leather removes the shoe from street use, except in case of walking to and from afternoon teas and luncheons. That only seal or calf skin suits the pavements; that low shoes are to be reserved for summer wear; that spats are not good form, except for men, and that laced shoes are the smart thing for the forenoon.

Health and Morality.

He who recklessly injures his health does not prove his unselfishness—he simply curtails his powers of doing good. And he who injures his character by welcoming evil influences is thereby inflicting a still greater evil upon the community.—Exchange.

WOULD REDUCE SALARIES.

Recommendations by the Committee of Municipal Reform League.

ST. PAUL, Feb. 9.—The Municipal Reform league at the Commercial club accepted the report of its committee on salaries of city officials, recommending a total reduction of $152,086, including $44,516 deducted from school teachers' salaries. The league listened to the report intently, item by item, and after accepting it, turned it over to the "committee of forty." These reductions can and should be made, says the committee, and will easily be made if civil service principles are applied to all branches of municipal government.

No city employes' salaries under $50 a month were reduced, and no reductions were made less than $50. No teachers' salaries under $45 a month were reduced.

"A Trip On the North-Western Limited between the Twin Cities and Chicago is like rolling in a King's Palace over two smooth rails. If the traveling public of thirty years ago had been told of the beauties and comforts of this fine train the story would have been thought a fairy tale. But it is all a reality now and the wonder is what new comfort or luxury will come in the future. Whatever it is, it will surely be found on The North-Western Line long before other lines think to adopt it.—The Press, Osceola, Wis.

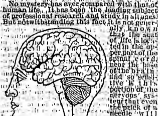
MYSTERIES!

The Nervous System the Seat of Life and Mind. Recent Wonderful Discoveries.

No mystery has ever compared with that of human life. It has been the leading subject of professional research and study in all ages. But notwithstanding this fact it is not generally known that the seat of life is located in the upper part of the spinal cord, near the base of the brain, and so sensitive is this portion of the nervous system that even the prick of a needle will cause instant death.



Recent discoveries have demonstrated that all the organs of the body are under the control of the nerve centers, located in or near the base of the brain, and that when these are deranged the organs which they supply with nerve fluid are also deranged. When it is remembered that a serious injury to the spinal cord will cause paralysis of the body below the injured point, because the nerve force is prevented by the injury from reaching the paralyzed portion, it will be understood how the derangement of the nerve centers will cause the derangement of the various organs which they supply with nerve force.

Two-thirds of chronic diseases are due to the imperfect action of the nerve centers at the base of the brain, not from a derangement primarily originating in the organ itself. The great mistake of physicians in treating these diseases is that they treat the organ rather than the nerve centers which are the cause of the trouble.

DR. FRANKLIN MILES, the celebrated specialist, has profoundly studied this subject for over 20 years, and has made many important discoveries in connection with it, chief among them being the facts contained in the above statement, and that the ordinary methods of treatment are wrong. All headache, dizziness, dullness, confusion, pressure, blues, mania, melancholy, insanity, epilepsy, St. Vitus dance, etc., are nervous diseases no matter how caused. The wonderful success of Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine is due to the fact that it is based on the foregoing principle.

DR. MILES' RESTORATIVE NERVINE is sold by all druggists on a positive guarantee, or sent direct by DR. MILES MEDICAL CO., Elkhart, Ind., on receipt of price, $1 per bottle, six bottles for $5, express prepaid. It contains neither opiates nor dangerous drugs.

DINNERS IN FRISCO.

CURIOUS COSMOPOLITAN RESTAURANTS ON THE COAST.

One May Dine In the Manner of a Different Country Every Night In the Week. A Dirty Italian Restaurant on the Water Front That Is Very Popular.

One of the features of cosmopolitan San Francisco is its restaurants. Every foreign colony boasts of a place where its native cooking can be had, and adventurous San Franciscans who care to look these places up can dine in the manner of a different country every night in the week. If an elaborate Chinese dinner, with its numberless impossible courses, each accompanied by sweetmeats, proves unattractive, a Hawaiian dinner, with poi and salted fish, can be had by walking a few blocks. For those who like highly spiced dinners there are the Italian and Spanish restaurants to choose from; and for those with small appetites, who look for novelty in service, there are the Turkish restaurants, with their unpronounceable dishes and delicious coffee.

The most popular of the foreign restaurants are the Italian. There are several of these scattered about the Latin quarter, which are much frequented by San Franciscans on account of the excellence of the cooking. Most of them are dirty, very dirty, as to floors and walls, and the Italians are not overscrupulous regarding the table linen. When a party of Americans enter, however, there is a general shuffle among the waiters to secure the service of the table and the prospective tip. The question of precedence being settled, the wine stained tablecloth is whisked off and replaced by one not always newly laundered or else suspiciously damp.

These restaurants are rarely on the main streets and have to be approached through dark alleys. One situated behind the county jail occupies the back room of a small Italian grocery store. In going there one is reminded of dark deeds and sharp stilettos, but the dinner is worth the journey. The chef of this place is famous for cooking "italiarini," a paste made by himself and cut in strips and cooked with a sauce made of tomatoes, spices and mushrooms. It is extremely rich and very peppery, but all Italian dishes are strongly dashed with chili peppers.

The dinner is attended with great ceremony. A bottle of their sour claret is served with each dinner. Every Italian drinks about two quarts of it with his dinner, so the bottle supply sometimes runs short. In this event the waiter goes to the bar, fills an empty bottle from a demijohn, drives in a cork, and then carries the bottle to the table where it is needed, sometimes four feet from the bar, and impressively producing his corkscrew draws the cork as carefully as though he were handling the finest burgundy. His demeanor is so serious throughout the performance that one dare not look amused.

A very popular restaurant is Bazzuro's, which is situated near the water front. This is greatly patronized by the Italian fishermen, who file in after their day's work, still wearing their gum boots and smelling strongly of their craft. It is also frequented by the Italian vegetable gardeners, who drive in from the outskirts of town, and after disposing of their stock stop to dine. When the place is reasonably well filled, there is a babel of voices. They are all talking at once, and out of the confusion the word "scudi" is distinguished above all others.

This means money, which the proprietor says, with a shrug, "they talk about all the time, all the time." The fishermen bring the best of their day's catch here, and the gardeners offer their choicest vegetables. The chef, whose kitchen is back of the dining tables and in full view of the room, is a merry fellow, and between his juggling feats, tossing his pan into the air to turn the cooking fish or meat exchanges gossip and jests with the diners. This place is kept comparatively clean. The floor is covered with sawdust and the ceiling festooned with gaudy colored paper cut in fanciful designs. Two parrots add to the general din, and all sorts and conditions of cats prowl around the floor.

The restaurant is conducted by two brothers, one of whom waits on table, while the other attends bar and looks after the cash receipts. Every Italian after dining stops at the bar for a chat and a drink. Instead of a liquor, the host pours generous glasses of claret for himself and his guests, and these are speedily tossed off. A casual visitor, after witnessing this ceremony about 25 times in quick succession, is apt to grow nervous about the health of the host, but he appears none the worse for his conviviality at the end of the evening. The younger brother sometimes relieves his brother at the bar. He is quite as hospitable, and his invariable drink being absinthe and seltzer his case seems even more alarming.

This restaurant, at 7:30 in the evening, when dinner is in full swing, presents an odd sight, the Italians sitting around the tables, most of them with their hats on, gesticulating and talking excitedly across the room, while they roll the spaghetti round their forks and dexterously transfer it in yard lengths to their mouths. A butcher, with all the marks of his trade about him, occupies a table with the policeman on the beat, who gets the best service of all; a few men about town, who have heard of the chef's fame, and forget the unsavory looking company in their enjoyment of the plates, and often a table or two taken by young society girls with their chaperons and escorts. The girls consider a dinner at Bazzuro's a tremendous lark.

The Americans do not venture on the claret so generously served with the dinner. A flask of Chianti is ordered in its stead, and the proprietor always proffers the empty flask to the youngest member of the party as a souvenir.—San Francisco Letter.

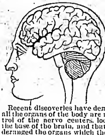
MYSTERIES!

The Nervous System the Seat of Life and Mind. Recent Wonderful Discoveries.

No mystery has ever compared with that of human life. It has been the leading subject of professional research and study in all ages. But notwithstanding this fact it is not generally known that the seat of life is located in the upper part of the spinal cord, near the base of the brain and so sensitive is this portion of the nervous system that even the prick of a needle will cause instant death.



Recent discoveries have demonstrated that all the organs of the body are under the control of the nerve centers, located in or near the base of the brain, and that when these are deranged the organs which they supply with nerve fluid are also deranged. When it is remembered that a serious injury to the spinal cord will cause paralysis of the body below the injured point, because the nerve force is prevented by the injury from reaching the paralyzed portion, it will be understood how the derangement of the nerve centers will cause the derangement of the various organs which they supply with nerve force.

Two-thirds of chronic diseases are due to the imperfect action of the nerve centers at the base of the brain, not from a derangement primarily originating in the organ itself. The great mistake of physicians in treating these diseases is that they treat the organ rather than the nerve centers which are the cause of the trouble.

DR. FRANKLIN MILES, the celebrated specialist, has profoundly studied this subject for over 20 years, and has made many important discoveries in connection with it, chief among them being the facts contained in the above statement, and that the ordinary methods of treatment are wrong. All headache, dizziness, dullness, confusion, pressure, blues, mania, melancholy, insanity, epilepsy, St. Vitus dance, etc., are nervous diseases no matter how caused. The wonderful success of Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine is due to the fact that it is based on the foregoing principle.

DR. MILES' RESTORATIVE NERVINE is sold by all druggists on a positive guarantee, or sent direct by DR. MILES MEDICAL CO., Elkhart, Ind., on receipt of price, $1 per bottle, six bottles for $5, express prepaid. It contains neither opiates nor dangerous drugs.

DINNERS IN FRISCO.

CURIOUS COSMOPOLITAN RESTAURANTS ON THE COAST.

One May Dine In the Manner of a Different Country Every Night In the Week. A Dirty Italian Restaurant on the Water Front That Is Very Popular.

One of the features of cosmopolitan San Francisco is its restaurants. Every foreign colony boasts of a place where its native cooking can be had, and adventurous San Franciscans who care to look these places up can dine in the manner of a different country every night in the week. If an elaborate Chinese dinner, with its numberless impossible courses, each accompanied by sweetmeats, proves unattractive, a Hawaiian dinner, with poi and salted fish, can be had by walking a few blocks. For those who like highly spiced dinners there are the Italian and Spanish restaurants to choose from, and for those with small appetites, who look for novelty in service, there are the Turkish restaurants, with their unpronounceable dishes and delicious coffee.

The most popular of the foreign restaurants are the Italian. There are several of these scattered about the Latin quarter, which are much frequented by San Franciscans on account of the excellence of the cooking. Most of them are dirty, very dirty, as to floors and walls, and the Italians are not oversqueamish regarding the table linen. When a party of Americans enter, however, there is a general shuffle among the waiters to secure the service of the table and the prospective tip. The question of precedence being settled, the wine stained tablecloth is whisked off and replaced by one not always newly laundered or else suspiciously damp.

These restaurants are rarely on the main streets and have to be approached through dark alleys. One situated behind the county jail occupies the back room of a small Italian grocery store. In going there one is reminded of dark deeds and sharp stilettos, but the dinner is worth the journey. The chef of this place is famous for cooking 'Italiarini,'' a paste made by himself and cut in strips and cooked with a sauce made of tomatoes, spices and mushrooms. It is extremely rich and very peppery, but all Italian dishes are strongly dashed with chili peppers.

The dinner is attended with great ceremony. A bottle of their sour claret is served with each dinner. Every Italian drinks about two quarts of it with his dinner, so the bottle supply sometimes runs short. In this event the waiter goes to the bar, fills an empty bottle from a demijohn, drives in a cork, and then carries the bottle to the table where it is needed, sometimes four feet from the bar, and impressively producing his corkscrew draws the cork as carefully as though he were handling the finest burgundy. His demeanor is so serious throughout the performance that one dare not look amused.

A very popular restaurant is Bazzuro's, which is situated near the water front. This is greatly patronized by the Italian fishermen, who file in after their day's work, still wearing their gum boots and smelling strongly of their craft. It is also frequented by the Italian vegetable gardeners, who drive in from the outskirts of town, and after disposing of their stock stop to dine. When the place is reasonably well filled, there is a babel of voices. They are all talking at once, and out of the confusion the word "scadi" is distinguished above all others.

This means money, which the proprietor says, with a shrug, "they talk about all the time, all the time." The fishermen bring the best of their day's catch here, and the gardeners offer their choicest vegetables. The chef, whose kitchen is back of the dining tables and in full view of the room, is a merry fellow, and between his juggling feats, tossing his pan into the air to turn the cooking fish or meat exchanges gossip and jests with the diners. This place is kept comparatively clean. The floor is covered with sawdust and the ceiling festooned with gaudy colored paper cut in fanciful designs. Two parrots add to the general din, and all sorts and conditions of cats prowl around the floor.

The restaurant is conducted by two brothers, one of whom waits on table, while the other attends bar and looks after the cash receipts. Every Italian after dining stops at the bar for a chat and a drink. Instead of a liquor, the host pours generous glasses of claret for himself and his guests, and these are speedily tossed off. A casual visitor, after witnessing this ceremony about 25 times in quick succession, is apt to grow nervous about the health of the host, but he appears none the worse for his conviviality at the end of the evening. The younger brother sometimes relieves his brother at the bar. He is quite as hospitable, and his invariable drink being absinthe and seltzer his case seems even more alarming.

This restaurant, at 7:30 in the evening, when dinner is in full swing, presents an odd sight, the Italians sitting around the tables, most of them with their hats on, gesticulating and talking excitedly across the room, while they roll the spaghetti round their forks and dexterously transfer it in yard lengths to their mouths. A butcher, with all the marks of his trade about him, occupies a table with the policeman on the beat, who gets the best service of all; a few men about town, who have heard of the chef's fame, and forget the unsavory looking company in their enjoyment of the prices, and often a table or two taken by young society girls with their chaperons and escorts. The girls consider a dinner at Bazzuro's a tremendous lark.

The Americans do not venture on the claret so generously served with the dinner. A flask of Chianti is ordered in its stead, and the proprietor always proffers the empty flask to the youngest member of the party as a souvenir.—San Francisco Letter.

FRIDAY AND SATURDAY FEB. 22d & 23d.

DONT FAIL TO SEE AND HEAR

THE BROWNIES IN FAIRYLAND.

At the Grand Opera House, Crookston, on Friday and Saturday, Feb. 22 and 23 with matinee Saturday at 2:30 p. m., there will be produced one of the most clever conceptions of the century; we might refer to the "Brownies in Fairyland," a musical cantata for children written by the world-famous entertainer, Palmer Cox. One hundred of Crookston's brightest children take part in this mammoth production fifty boys as "Brownies," and fifty girls as fairies. The costumes made especially for this engagement in New York under the personal supervision of Palmer Cox, are very elaborate, and make the stage appear like a page from one of Palmer Cox's famous "Brownie" books. The fat little policeman; the dude with his cane; Uncle Sam; the poet; the sailor; the Chinaman; the Indian, and dozens of other well-known Brownies will be there, and together with a live wasp, hornet and beetle will make you hold your sides with laughter for two hours. The tableaux, with changing colored calcium light effects, are the most brilliant conceivable. Rehearsals have been held for some time, and it is already well prepared. It is to be given under the auspices of the First M. E. church, Crookston Mesdames Duntley and Richardson and Mr. W. A. Sissons are instructing the children under the direction of Prof. W. A. Milne. The play is produced by special arrangement with Palmer Cox, through his managers, Major J. B. Pond, of New York, and H. B. Thearle, of Chicago.

We look forward with delight for the completion of this gigantic undertaking.

VOL. XVIII. CROOKSTON, MINNESOTA, THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 21, 1895. NO. 45.

SUPREME COURT DECISION
IN THE CELEBRATED
TAYLOR WAREHOUSE CASE.

This case brought by D. N. Taylor against J. P. Marcum to recover the sum of $20., alleged to be due on a certain contract between the plaintiff and defendant has just been decided in favor of the defendant Marcum. The case is of so much importance, involving several hundred similar cases that we venture to give the report in full as follows:

9196.
STATE OF MINNESOTA, Supreme Court,
October Term, A. D. 1894. No. 282.
DAVIN N. TAYLOR, Appellant,
vs.
JAMES P. MARCUM, Respondent.
} Syllabus.

The contract, forming the subject matter of this action, and the evidence as to performance of the contract by the appellant considered.

Held, that upon the admitted facts and evidence there was not a substantial compliance of the contract by the appellant so that he can recover.

Order affirmed.

9196.
STATE OF MINNESOTA, Supreme Court,
October Term, A: D. 1894. No. 282.
DAVIN N. TAYLOR, Appellant.
vs.
JAMES P. MARCUM, Respondent.
} Opinion.

The parties hereto, at Crookston, on May 29th, 1890, entered into a written contract, the material provisions of which are substantially as follows:

That Taylor (the appellant) agrees TO BUILD twenty grain bins in this city, each capable of storing five hundred bushels of wheat, and maintain them ten years, subject to accidents from the elements, allowing time to rebuild if destroyed, in one of which Marcum (the respondent) may store for SHIPMENT his farm product, at any time when not in use by others, and if so occupied may enter his name for use of bin as soon as one is vacant, and shall be entitled to his regular turn as his name appears in the list. In place of bins heretofore mentioned, bags may be furnished in which to store each car, separately, at same price as herein stated for bins. He may use the bin for four consecutive days, for the sum of five dollars, and for any longer time shall pay one dollar for each additional day or part thereof, if it is needed for others. Taylor further agrees to do the clerical work of shipping such produce, receiving and paying over the money it brings after deducting expenses of same, retaining four such for days storage and CLERICAL SERVICE the sum of five dollars. He also further agrees to act as agent for Marcum in procuring seed grain, charging him purchase price, travelling and transportation expenses, but nothing for time, provided Marcum deposits with Taylor the current price of the grain he orders. Taylor further agrees to keep a record on file of any property Marcum may wish to sell, which record shall be open to the public free. In consideration of Taylor, or his representative, holding himself ready to perform such service, obtaining grain and keeping such record Marcum agrees to pay Taylor, or his representative, ten dollars on the 15th day of November in each and every year for ten years. The complaint in this action sets out this contract in full and alleges that the plaintiff at ALL times performed all the stipulations and agreements in the contract, agreed to be performed, and has ever held himself ready to do and perform the same on request of the defendant, and that the defendant has not paid the ten dollars for the years 1892, 1893 respectively. The answer admits the making of the contract and denies all of the other allegations of the complaint. There was a jury trial of the cause with a verdict for the defendant. From an order denying his motion for a new trial the plaintiff appealed to this court. The only issue, under the pleadings, was whether or not the plaintiff had substantially performed all of the stipulations of the contract on his part, which were the consideration for the defendant's promise to pay the ten dollars each year for ten years. The burden of proving such performance was upon the plaintiff. G. S. 1878 C. 66 S. 109.

It is conceded by counsel for the plaintiff that under the addmitted facts and undisputed evidence in this case it was a question of law for the court, whether such performance had been shown or not, and that a verdict should have been directed for either the plaintiff or defendant. This is correct, and the question for which party the verdict should have been directed depends upon the construction to be given to the contract. The contract is unique in many particulars and its meaning somewhat obscure. It must be construed, with reference to the manifest intention of the parties, and its language be read so as to give effect to such intentions and not to defend them, if the words used will reasonably bear such a construction. It is perfectly apparent on the face of the contract that the primary purpose of the defendant in entering into the contract was to secure the right and privilege of obtaining at a reasonable charge the necessary facilities for storing his grain by itself and shipping and marketing it himself. In short he agreed to pay ten dollars a year to secure at a reasonable rate facilities for marketing his own grain. To secure this result the plaintiff agreed TO BUILD TWENTY GRAIN BINS, each of the capacity of five hundred bushels, and MAINTAIN THEM FOR TEN YEARS, in one of which the defendant should have the right to store FOR SHIPMENT his farm product. The contract is silent as to where or how the bins were to be built. The details of construction and location are left by the contract to the discretion of the plaintiff, but the law implies the obligation on his part to so construct and locate them, that when completed they would be reasonably fit for the purposes they were intended for by the parties viz: to furnish reasonable facilities for storing and shipping grain. The plaintiff was bound to so locate and construct them. It is claimed however that the plaintiff was not bound to build or maintain any bins under this contract. This claim is based upon the provision of the contract to the effect that "in place of bins heretofore mentioned, bags may be furnished to store each car separately, at same price as herein stated for bins." This clause is not to be construed literally and as an independent provision, but in harmony with all the other terms of the contract. So construed it means that, that the defendant may have his grain stored in the warehouse, where the bins are, in bags at his option, that the same rate per car as for bins, or that the plaintiff, in case he has no vacant bins, may place the grain in bags, and charge the same rate per car load as for bins. We need not decide which is the correct construction for either is fatal to the claim of the plaintiff that it was optional with him to build and maintain bins or not. The contract provides, after stating the agreement of the plaintiff, to build and maintain the bins, to do the clerical work of shipping the grain, to act as agent if requested in purchasing seed grain, and to keep a sale record, that in consideration of Taylor holding himself

CASE OF THE STATE

Evidence of the Prosecution in the Hayward Trial Is All Given.

STRONG CASE AGAINST HARRY.

Nothing Left Undone to Convict the Accused of the Murder.

MINNEAPOLIS, Feb. 18.—The last witness for the state in the Hayward murder trail has been examined and at 3:35 o'clock the county attorney said, addressing the court, "The state rests here."

The announcement created a ripple of surprise, but there really remained nothing to add to the avalanche of corroborative evidence which has swept away the puny barriers thrown up by the defense. The remarkable story which Attorney Hall said he would prove in his opening address has been told by the chief actor in that bloody narrative. It has been corroborated by the scathing testimony of the accused man's own brother, and the extraordinary story he was constrained to tell has been corroborated by dozens of witnesses.

The case as it stands fits Harry Hayward like a glove. And however much that individual may smirk and smile and affect indifference, it will require proof little short of the miraculous to save his neck from the halter.

Miss Ging's Last Remarks.

The sensation of the day was when the state called Mrs. Lillian Hazleton to the stand. Mrs. Hazleton was a friend of Catherine Ging's and is perhaps the last person with whom she held any considerable conversation on the night of the murder. The ladies met in Hale & Thomas' dry goods store on Nicollet avenue at about 4:30 in the afternoon and were together for half an hour. In the course of that conversation the name of Harry Hayward was mentioned. Mrs. Hazleton asked Miss Ging to supper, and her reply, given in careless, friendly confidence, connected her lover inextricably with her cruel murder. She said: "I cannot go; I have a business engagement with Mr. Hayward."

Cross-examination failed to shake Mrs. Hazleton's recollection of the time, place or exact conversation.

Peter Vallalie's Testimony.

The first witness introduced was Peter Vallalie, the hackman of whom Harry Hayward had spoken to Adry as being willing to assist in the proposed crime. Vallalie's testimony was most damaging, as it corroborated in a most striking way one portion of Adry Hayward's remarkable story, and thus rendered thoroughly untensble the defense's pet theory as to Adry's sanity. Vallalie testified that Harry Hayward had approached him with questions as to whether he had ever "done anything" and if so whether his conscience had bothered him. Hayward had later asked Vallalie whether he would drive a hack into Lake Calhoun and let the occupant drown for a sum of money.

"I told him I was no swimmer," said Vallalie, "and that was about the end of it."

First Outside Corroboration.

This is the first corroboration of the stories of Blixt and Adry obtained from an entirely outside source, and exhibited in a striking way Hayward's strangely careless way of asking incriminating questions and making damaging statements. That a man capable of concocting so cunning and intricate a plot should have made so many confidants seems almost as incredible as that he should have concocted the plot at all. Mr. Erwin at once recognized the supreme importance of this testimony, and tried to have it stricken out entirely. The court, however, refused to sustain his objection, and the evidence goes to the jury. It was a knock out blow reserved by the state until the very last, and sadly upsets the defense's plans.

SURPRISED ERWIN.

Sensation Caused in the Hayward Case by a Witness for the Defense.

MINNEAPOLIS, Feb. 16.—M. D. Wilson, a horse dealer in this city, created a profound sensation in the Hayward murder trial by swearing that he saw Harry Hayward in the Goosman buggy with Catherine Ging at 7:20 o'clock on the night of Dec. 3. He was driving home and met the Goosman rig as he turned on the boulevard at the corner of Lyndale avenue.

This extraordinary and unexpected evidence has completely upset the calculations of the theory builders and throws into the shade all of the sensational developments which have preceded it. Mr. Wilson swore positively that the buggy was occupied by a man and a woman. He as Miss Ging, whom he knew well, having had business dealings with her during the past three years. The man by her side he did not know, but recognized him at police headquarters the next day as Harry Hayward.

The witness said he left his barn at 7:10 and arrived at Lyndale avenue, where he met the rig, at about 7:20. By the light of the moon he saw a man with a light moustache, a brown hat and a black or brown overcoat. That man he afterwards recognized as Harry Hayward.

An ominous silence followed this thunderbolt. Both sides seemed dazed by it. Mr. Nye asked only a few questions. Mr. Erwin asked a number with some petulance, but the damning evidence was not shaken.

Harry Hayward said that the absence of any distinct line of defense in the opening speech of John Day Smith was by no means an indication of weakness, as the public seemed to think.

A STAR WITNESS.

Miss Maggie Wachtler Helps the Hayward Defense Out of a Bad Hole.

MINNEAPOLIS, Feb. 18.—Miss Wachter is the star witness for the defense in the Hayward case. Maggie was put on the stand and in five minutes she had talked the attorneys on both sides of the case into a trance.

The witness ascended the stand attired in gray furs, a black veil and black skirt. She looked indignant and proved in very short order that her looks did not belie the fact. When asked as to the statement that Blixt had accused Adry Hayward of having been his accomplice, and said Harry was to be accused of the murder, Miss Wachter began talking at a tremendous rate. She said that Blixt had given this as part of a statement to his attorney, but that the latter had become very angry and told Blixt to say nothing more about Adry Hayward.

"After that," said Miss Wachter, "Blixt said, 'Oh, I forgot you wanted me to tell the truth.'"

Thereafter, Miss Wachter testified, Blixt did not mention Adrian Hayward's name throughout his statement.

The story told by this witness appears to justify the claims made by the defense of intimidation.

Threatened by Attorneys.

When asked whether she had been threatened by attorneys on the case, Miss Wachter replied: "I should think I had." She then told of the visit of Mr. Hall last Saturday. The attorney had flattered and threatened her. He had attacked her character and threatened her with loss of employment. She had also been threatened by the attorney for Blixt, and, in short, her life had been made a misery.

The witness would not swear that Blixt had said "Adry went out in the carriage with me." She could not be positive as to that.

During her arraignment of Mr. Hall, Miss Wachter looked pointedly at that gentleman. She mocked his manner of speech and threw the courtroom into spasms of laughter. The witness has evidently a very strong feeling against the attorney for Blixt. It is noticeable that the conscientious scruples of the young woman were communicated to Attorney E. J. McMahon, former partner of Blixt's attorney. The fact is apparent that a deadly feud exists between these two.

The manner of the witness was so peculiar, so evidently vindictive against Mr. Hall, that the value of her testimony was a good deal lessened in the public estimate.

The Cross-Examination.

Mr. Nye submitted her to a scathing cross-examination, and the witness was made to read her notes to the court and attorneys to see what bearing the words had upon the rest of the statement. The witness stated that she had put down the words, "About two weeks before the murder," and at that point had been stopped and crossed them out. The cross-examination and examination of the book did develop, however, that the line written and crossed out was written at the top line of the note book. It had no bearing on the rest of the story, which flowed along without it before and after, like a smooth running current. It was shown that in other places in the book the witness had not written on the top line at all, leaving it vacant. The state's attorney will argue that it is peculiar that this line should come exactly at the top of the page and have no bearing on the remainder of the statement, in fact, break its connection.

Attorney R. R. Odell will take the stand and deny her story in its entirety, and it is apparent from the questions asked her by counsel for the state that other witnesses will be brought to contradict her testimony.

Thomas Waterman's Testimony.

Thomas Waterman was called to testify as to Harry Hayward's movements on Dec. 3, the day of the murder. He contradicted Adry Hayward in several important particulars as to time. Three boarders at Harry Hayward's boarding house testified that he was in the dining room as late as 7:10 that evening, which brings him dangerously close to the time when Liveryman Wilson claims to have seen him driving with Miss Ging, half a mile away. The defense expects to establish a complete alibi for the defendant from 1 until 10:30 p. m. the day of the murder.

The cross-examination of Mr. Waterman by County Attorney Nye was very thorough. Witness admitted that Harry once said to him: "Waterman, how honest are you anyway?" I said, 'Oh, I don't know.' He asked me what I would do if some one should offer me $1,000 to set fire to Bassett's lumber yard. I said, 'Oh, I don't know. I might see how far he would go or I might take the money and notify Bassett and try to get part of it.'"

BOND ELECTION.

Resulting in a Very Light Vote and the Defeat of the Proposition to Issue Bonds. —The Vote.

An extremely light vote was cast—only 390 in the city, and as surprising as it may seem, the issue was defeated. More apathy seemed to exist than one would suppose would be the case in view of the importance of the question, and there seemed to be a good deal of misunderstanding. Howbeit the bonds were beaten and there you are. The following is the vote:

First ward—98 votes cast; 51 for to 47 against.

Second ward—94 votes cast; 50 for to 44 against.

Third ward—44 votes cast; 16 for to 28 against.

Fourth ward—136 votes cast; 88 for to 48 against.

Fifth ward—18 votes cast; 17 for to 1 against.

Making a total of 234 for to 156 against, a majority of 78 in favor of bonds, but as the law requires a two-thirds majority the bonds were defeated by a narrow margin, which a little good, efficient work would have overcome easily.

COLD AND STORMY.

Whenever we are disposed (if any of us ever are) to 'grumble' about cold and stormy weather in the Red River Valley this year, we ought to pick up the papers and read about the times they are having in other states in the Union. In New York York, last week, they were blockaded with snow all over the state and for years the weather has not been so cold. The editor of one of the best and most reliable local papers in the whole of western New York said: "The stage driver on the Penn Yan route informs us that the cold was so intense yesterday when he arrived at Italy Hill that the shoes on his sleigh were frozen off." Now we happen to know the writer of that snake story, and we know that he would not lie about one pair of sleigh-shoes. His father was a good old Presbyterian elder and never fetched him up that way, and he would sooner see a whole stage load of passengers freeze solid than to lie about the shoes. All this and hundreds of other reports we have seen goes to show that here in the banana belt we know very little about severe weather this winter. It will be remembered that up to late in January the weather had been very mild and pleasant; February, up to the 11th, being the very coldest of the winter, since when it has not been so severe, and it will not be long now before the first spring month will be here. Then, consider the weather in the south; where the orange crop was entirely ruined by the extreme cold weather, while our bananas have not even been touched by the frost! Before the whole we have everything to be thankful for, if we did but know it. One trouble in this world is that we do not half appreciate our blessings until we lose them—and then it is too late to repine.

WHY NOT RAISE BUCKWHEAT?

W. O. Mathews, who has had experience farming in this country, said to the JOURNAL man last Thursday: "I have often wondered that farmers do not raise more buckwheat here than they do. Look at the amount of buckwheat flour that is annually consumed, and I dare say not one-tenth of the buckwheat to make it is raised here. This is all wrong. I know that buck-wheat can be as successfully grown here as it can anywhere that it will grow at all and besides the profit in the buckwheat it is one of the finest crops there is to clear the soil of weeds. If I farm it next year I shall certainly have a good patch of buck-wheat and shall have a good big patch of corn. I shall go heavy on cows also; I want four hogs to every cow on the place. I believe in small fruits also and agree fully with Frank Haseltine in what he says in last issue of the JOURNAL. I think he struck the key-note when he said you want lots of manure in the small fruit patch and the garden, and I think he might have added that a few loads of sand per acre, when it can be got handy is a big thing. It is true that our great staple crop, wheat, is extremely low just now, but appearances all indicate that everything else the farmer has to sell will bring good prices and I don't see any reason for a man's getting discouraged in the least. I fully believe that farming will pay better in the RRed Iver Valley right now than anywhere else in the United States—if properly done. It requires intelligence though."

VETERAN NURSERYMAN,

FRANK T. HASELTINE.

Talks Interestingly on the Culture and Proper Care of Small Fruits.

The most important part of growing small fruits in this climate, is care in planting and cultivation. First the ground should be well plowed; put a good coat of well rotted manure on the ground, then plow it under to a good depth. This will feed the roots of the bushes and make them grow strong stalks. Plant young, thrifty bushes two years old, four feet apart in the row, and have the rows eight feet apart so you can plant a row of vegetables between. Then you will have to cultivate the bushes the same time you do the vegetables. Cultivate with a horse going twice in each row. Hoe around the plants and bushes; keep the ground clear of weeds and grass; make three cultivations in a season. Late in the fall give a good top dressing of fine, well rotted manure around the bushes. Cultivate again the following season. The second and third years from planting you will have lots of fruit. Don't fail to cultivate and mulch each year, using plenty of manure for top dressing. The first on the list for profit and sure to grow in the climate are currants. The best and those which yield most are Victoria, Prince Albert and Long Bunch Holland, all red varieties. The best white currant for yield and profit is White Grape. They will grow and do well without trimming for ten years. Gooseberries come next; are hardy, will do well but not as profitable as currants. The Houghton Seedling is the hardiest in this climate and best bearer. Currants and gooseberries are perfectly hardy and will grow here without winter protection. Raspberries are one of the most profitable fruits we grow in this climate. The bushes should be planted the same distance apart as currants. The best and hardiest raspberry I have grown is the Philadelphia Red. It will grow without winter protection. After the third year you can mulch down heavy between rows with straw or coarse manure six to eight inches in depth; keep it on the ground the year round. It will smother the weeds, grass and suckers that come from the roots of the bushes. Trim out all the old stalks after the third year. In spring cut back tops of new canes. The best black raspberry is the Early Ohio. The canes have to be laid down late in the fall, covered with straw or coarse manure for winter protection. I have had an experience of fifteen years growing small fruits near Crookston. I have about three acres bearing small fruits in my nursery, such as currants, gooseberries, raspberries and strawberries. Strawberry plants will thrive best where you can have a protection of snow to cover them for winter. Plant on good rich ground, rows four feet apart and one foot apart in the row. Best and hardiest varieties for this climate are Wilson and Crescent seedling; used both together to fertilize each other.

I sold in Crookston market last summer 1900 quarts currants, 450 quarts strawberries, 200 quarts raspberries. This brought the snug little sum of $350. It cost for cultivating the ground, trimming, picking and marketing, $80; left a net profit of $270, or $90 an acre. I did not begin to supply the market—could have sold twice as much more. There is no crop you can put on the same size piece of land that will pay better than small fruits. There is always a cash market for them in cities and towns. The demand for the fruit is on the increase. Every farmer can have with little care and expense enough for his own family and some to spare, which will sell very readily for cash at that time of year when he needs groceries for his family.

The Great Northern Wreck.

The east-bound passenger train, that was wrecked near Towner N. D., last week, was in great luck after all in that so few were injured and none were killed. The smoking car and the dining car went into the ditch bottom up but none of the other coaches turned over. The train was not running very rapidly at the time, which no doubt accounts for the light damage to life and limb.

DOOM OF THE PEST

RESULT OF THE RUSSIAN THISTLE CONVENTION AT ST. PAUL.

Special Law to Be Recommended to Legislatures—Synopsis of the Measure—Land Owners, County Officers and Railroads to Assist in the Fight.

ST. PAUL, Feb. 16.—At the morning session of the Russian thistle convention a general discussion of the weed was indulged in, particularly for the benefit of members of the legislature who were present. Professor Dewey of Washington was the principal speaker. At the afternoon session the committee on legislation recommended the following as the synopsis of a law to be adopted by the states affected:

1. A special law relating to Russian thistles alone should be passed.

2. This weed should be declared a public nuisance and every plant should be destroyed before it matures its seed.

3. Owners of lands should be compelled to destroy the weed on their own lands, and care should be taken to give due and complete notice to non-resident land owners; also railway and other corporations should be compelled to destroy the thistles on their own lands and right of way.

4. Provisions should be made for the destruction of all of these weeds on all highways, roads and trails, and all other state lands, school lands and all lands the title to which is still in the federal government.

5. All precautionary measures to cause its destruction and prevent its further spread should be passed and rigidly enforced.

6. No special office or set of offices should be created, except, perhaps, a state board of thistle commissioners, but the destruction of this weed should be enforced through the channel by the authorities now existing, such as county commissioners, township and road supervisors, street commissioners, weed agents and police officers, or other specified officers.

7. The county commissioners, township and road supervisors, street commissioners, weed agents, or other specified officers mentioned in sec. 6, shall inspect all public and private land in their jurisdiction at least once in each month, from July to November, inclusive, and destroy or cause the destruction of all Russian thistles found.

8. An earnest appeal should be made to the federal government by concurrent resolutions to secure a liberal appropriation to assist those sections of our commonwealth where it has become a scourge beyond the control of its citizens.

The report of the committee was adopted and the convention adjourned.

THE QUEEN ON TRIAL.

Liliuokalani Before the Military Court for Misprision of Treason.

SAN FRANCISCO, Feb. 16.—The steamer Mariposa from Honolulu has arrived with news that there have been no executions yet. The ex-queen's trial is still pending. William France, charged with conspiracy, was the only man deported on the Mariposa. On the Australia, leaving Feb. 23, a number of others will be deported, including H. Peterson and Creighton, ex-cabinet officers and Wurdenburg, ex-postmaster general; V. V. Ashford and John F. Ashford and John F. Bowler have been found guilty of misprision of treason.

The government, just prior to the sailing of the Mariposa, decided to banish Carl Wideman, convicted of treason. He is a son of Judge Wideman, one of the ex-queen's commissioners to Washington.

Are Afraid of Willis.

The Warrimo's departure for Victoria was delayed for two hours in order to give Johnstone, Muller and Cranstoun, the banished men, an opportunity to see their respective consuls. Johnstone talked to the British commissioner, Hawes, after which he stated he was satisfied to go. Cranstoun saw Minister Willis, who protested to the government, claiming it had no right to send the men out of the country without first giving them a trial. The German consul also objected in the case of Muller. After the steamer sailed, Minister Willis boarded the Philadelphia and held a conference with Admiral Beardslee. The movements of Mr. Willis are watched anxiously, and it is said the government fears he will call the forces of the Philadelphia to his aid in case the government decides to hang Willard Seward, one of the men condemned by the military court.

PROHIBITION WINS AGAIN.

Defeat of the Resubmission Resolution by a Vote of 37 to 25.

BISMARCK, Feb. 13.—Resubmission again came up in the legislature on a motion to adopt the unfavorable report of the committee. The vote on placing the substitute among special orders was a tie; on adoption, 37 to 25. The resubmissionists admit final defeat unless it is on a high license proposition, which will now be presented. A concurrent resolution was adopted for an investigation as to the teachings of a Valley City normal school professor reflecting on the personal character of Lincoln.

THE SUGAR DIFFERENTIAL.

Senate Committee Will Report Favorably the House Repeal Bill.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 16.—The senate finance committee has agreed to report favorably the house bill repealing the one-tenth of a cent discriminating duty on sugar imported from bounty-paying countries.

STATE LEGISLATURE

TWENTY-NINTH BIENNIAL SESSION

Tuesday, Feb. 12.

Both houses adjourned over today, being the anniversary of Lincoln's birth.

Wednesday, Feb. 13.

SENATE—Senate file 31 caused considerable trouble. It was the bill transferring money from the school text book fund to the general fund. The house amended the bill, making the transfer to the internal improvement fund. The bill was finally sent to the committee on roads and bridges.

Senator Johnson's home trade resolution, relating to purchase of supplies for the Rochester asylum was passed.

An amendment to Sec. 6, Chap. 62, general statutes 1898, relating to divorce, and a bill authorizing towns to build fences for purpose of preventing spread of Russian thistles, recommended to pass.

HOUSE.—Most of the morning session was taken up with committee reports, an unusually large number of bills having been acted on. Before the noon adjournment the members attended the Fairchild reception in Governor Clough's office.

Representative Jacobson's resolution for the appointment of a committee to investigate the matter of salaries and fees paid to all officials, boards and employes of the state, was adopted by a unanimous vote.

The house adjourned over till Friday in order to give members an opportunity to accompany the committee on its visit to the reform school at Red Wing.

Thursday, Feb. 14.

SENATE—Senator Greer occupied the chair in committee of the whole. General orders being taken up Mr. Ozmun tried to have his corrupt practice bill placed at the head of the calendar, but his purpose in securing this with so many absent was defeated. Several bills were passed over because of their reference to committees.

The bill to increase the salaries of judges of the district court to $4,000 in cases where over 150 days term of court is held to a year precipitated a debate. Senator Sheehan suggested that the bill may be defective. The bill was recommended to pass.

Senator Heneman's bill to authorize villages to appropriate part of the license money for the purchase of libraries or school apparatus or upon road improvements was opposed by a number of senators and a long debate resulted. It was finally recommended to pass.

The bill to prevent pool selling and bookmaking was passed, together with several less important measures.

Senators Johnson, McHale and Stockton were named by Lieutenant Governor Day as the committee under the Johnson resolution to investigate the purchase of supplies for the Rochester hospital for the insane.

Friday, Feb. 15.

SENATE—Governor Clough sent in a communication to the senate declining to send in the report of the capitol experts to the senate. The governor suggests that the senate appoint a committee of not more than 15 to examine the document and report to the senate. The committee was finally authorized. Eight bills were passed.

HOUSE.—Representative Anderson of Chisago county introduced a resolution, which passed by a large vote, providing for a committee of seven to inquire as to the rumor that the Minneapolis exposition building can be secured for capitol or other state purposes. Mr. Anderson says that the people of his district are back of the resolution, and nobody else. The Hennepin delegation knew nothing of it in advance of its introduction.

On the calendar the fight on Representative Parker's bill to elect township supervisors for three years, one each year, was renewed, but the bill pulled through by a small margin. Two other bills passed, one relating to spread of noxious weeds and the other to summons by justice court.

In the committee of the whole two hours was spent discussing McKenney's bill to prohibit the sale of liquor on or within a mile of the state fair grounds. Recommended to pass.

Saturday, Feb. 16.

SENATE.—The senate accomplished an unusual amount of work at its afternoon session, while in the committee of the whole, with Senator Mosterman of Stillwater in the chair. Three bills for changes in the constitution were approved. One relates to the taxation of sleeping, drawing room and parlor car companies, and telegraph and telephone companies another purposes a change in the constitution relating to the taxation of private property for public purposes; and the third permits the investment of the permanent school fund in county, township, city and village bonds of the state.

The morning session was devoted to committee reports, introduction of bills and the discussion of several measures without action.

HOUSE—The pine land investigating committee's bill was introduced by Mr. Staples and ordered printed. It is a complete revision of the land laws of the state and has been carefully prepared to protect the interests of the state. The country elevator law is also to be revamped, and the bill under which it is to be done was introduced by Mr. Gibbs. Dr. Zier proposed a constitutional amendment providing for a board of pardons, and in another bill seeks to abolish the death penalty as punishment for murder. Twenty-seven new measures were introduced.

The afternoon session was adjourned without transacting any business.

Monday, Feb. 18.

SENATE.—The senate had as a special order for its evening session Senator Ozmun's corrupt practices act—S. F. 23. The author of the bill made a strong speech in its favor. After considerable discussion the bill was recommitted for amendment. The bill providing for the removal of screens and curtains from saloon windows was recommended for indefinite postponement.

Senate File 324 was passed. This bill is in accordance with the suggestion contained in the governor's message and permits larger latitude in the investment of school funds.

HOUSE—Consideration of the capitol bill occupied an hour and was finally made a special order for Tuesday, March 5. The baking powder bill was recommended to pass; also the bill compelling railroads to construct "Y" connections at intersecting points and to establish through joint rates.

Four bills of local importance were passed.

For Starving His Horse.

STILLWATER, Minn., Feb. 19.—Ferdinand Tobisch was sentenced to 80 days in jail for starving his horse. He was arrested by an officer of the humane society.

THE WORK OF CONGRESS

The amendment to the legislative and judicial bill giving members clerks for the whole year, which was recommended in committee of the whole, was voted down on the final passage of the bill.

The senate finance committee has reported a bill for the unlimited coinage of silver, the dollars to consist of 412½ grains and the government to take as seigniorage all above the market price on the day the metal is deposited for coinage.

Wednesday, Feb. 13.

The senate resumed consideration of the postoffice appropriation bill. Mr. Vilas offered an amendment to buy instead of rent postal cars. The senate agreed to the house resolution extending the time for making returns on the income tax to April 15 next.

District of Columbia matters occupied the time of the house.

Thursday, Feb. 14.

The senate discussed the postal appropriation bill. All the amendments proposed were defeated.

The house defeated the gold bond resolution by a vote of 121 to 165. The vote was not divided on party lines.

Friday, Feb. 15.

The senate passed the postoffice appropriation bill and considered the agricultural bill. The pooling bill was also considered for a short time.

The naval appropriation bill was debated in the house.

Saturday, Feb. 16.

There was a stormy financial debate in the senate over a resolution of Senator Hill. Speaking to the resolution Wolcott and Teller each scored the president for selling bonds at $1.04½ when bonds not so favorably drawn brought $1.12 on the market.

The house put in the day on appropriation bills.

Monday, Feb. 18.

The agricultural appropriation bill passed the senate and the bill for unlimited coinage of silver was made unfinished business. This gives it the right of way even to the exclusion of appropriation bills.

The house passed several bills under suspension of the rules. Among them was one to raise the rate of pensions for Mexican war veterans to $12 a month.

CHAPTER IV.

A GUERRILLA'S HOME.

“A dispatch for you, general.”

An aid-de-camp entered, followed by a tall, bronzed Confederate cavalryman with very muddy boots and a southern sombrero on his head. In his hand he carried a sealed envelope, on the left hand corner of which was printed, “Official business.”

“Why not bring it yourself?” asked the general, evidently put out at being interrupted at dinner.

“The messenger says that he was instructed to deliver it to no one but yourself. It is from general headquarters.”

The man stalked in, his accouterments rattling as he did so, and removing his hat handed the general the communication. He opened it, and seeing that it was in cipher handed it to a member of his staff who possessed the key and directed him to unravel it. It read as follows:

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF TENNESSEE,
June 27, 1862.

To General ——, Commanding Cavalry on Extreme Right:

Mlr rrwec lrddrx mexrr lzi krxn m nbpy mfsfhse ut tixwrax dari sm mirwc gh lgjq vvim kltvq gs ljssga mikkingmfy fc lvdzvkwvgc. Egzi jwpxy tx hagw.

BRAXTON BRAGG, Com'd'g.

Scarcely had the general given the dispatch over for interpretation when another from the same source, which had come by telegraph, was handed him also, evidently an inextricable jumble of letters. This, too, was taken up by the cipher officer. In the course of half an hour he handed interpretations of both to his chief. The first read as follows:

> The enemy having taken the gaps, I will abandon my present line. Be ready to form rear guard to troops retreating by University. Move south at once.

Here is the second:

> Enemy's telegram in cipher received. Cannot Miss Baggs secure information of the enemy's intentions as to following this army across the Tennessee? Such information would enable us to be prepared if he attacks in concentrated form or cut him up in detail if he divides.

The general gave the two messages a few minutes' consideration, and then, dismissing the aid who had interpreted them, directed him to inform Miss Baggs that he would like to see her.

When she entered, the general handed her the interpreted copies of the two dispatches.

“Here is a more important work for you than any you have yet attempted,” he said.

She read both the dispatches and then thought a few minutes.

“I am ready to undertake it, general,” she said, “but without much hope of success. I must first succeed in taking off a message in which the plan of the Yankees is given or hinted at so clearly as to be inferred, and then it must be interpreted, for it will surely be in cipher.”

“If you could succeed in both, you would insure us victory in the west, and that would be half the battle to the cause.”

“I will undertake it.”

“You will be exposed to a frightful danger.”

“You know, general, that I have devoted my life to this work. I consider that as already sacrificed.”

“We move from here at once, as you see by the order just received.”

“I will go with you a part of the way and watch an opportunity to slip back behind the Union lines.”

With that Miss Baggs went out, and the general began his preparations to cover the retreat of the right of the Confederate army.

No further attention was paid to Farmer Slack and his family. Evidently there was business of greater importance on hand. They went out on to the doorstep, where they stood wondering what was going on about them. Every one was stirring. An orderly dashed up to the door leading an officer's horse saddled and bridled. An aid ran out of the house, and mounting in hot haste rode away. A man from an upper window called out to him:

“They've secured the gaps.”

“Which?”

“Liberty and Hoover's. All of 'em.”

“Well, what of it?”

“What of it? It means retreat.” And before the last word was spoken he was out of sight.

In a few minutes a bugle was heard. Its tones had scarcely died away before the camp was alive with men preparing to move.

The farmer determined to get his children into the wagon as soon as possible. He had been given his pass, which, for the present at least, was likely to be of little use, as he would simply follow the army. The party lost no time in getting to the wagon and into it and drove down the road. But they were too late. The way was choked with horsemen and wagons, and they were soon brought to a halt. The general dashed past, with his staff, and who should be by his side, her striped dress covered with a gray riding skirt, a sombrero on her head, with a jaunty cock's feather encircling its crown, but Miss Baggs. Seeing the farmer's wagon waiting by the roadside, she reined in Bobby Lee beside Souri and took her hand.

“Goodby, my dear. I trust that your innocent heart will not have to suffer more than the rest of us during the continuance of this fearful struggle. You know we are all being tried in a fiery furnace. We'll meet again. I know it. If you ever need any help or protection when our army is near, hunt up Betsy Baggs.”

“Whar's th' chicken coop?” called Jakey as she rode away.

“What chicken coop?”

“Th' one on wheels.”

“Oh, the buggy,” she said, smiling. “I left that for the Yankees to pick up when they come along.”

“Rats'll be ridin inter it, I reckon.”

“If he can find it, he's welcome to it,” and with a laugh she dashed after the rest.

Farmer Slack only succeeded in getting a few miles on the way before nightfall. Then, coming to a small village, he made up his mind that it would be better to sleep there than attempt to go on through a country being abandoned by one force to be immediately occupied by another. He knew well the crowded condition of the roads and the perils of night travel. So singling out a house beside the road, which was the main street of the place, and seeing a woman standing in the door, he asked if she would give him and his party a night's lodging.

“Reckon I kin keep you uns, but hain't got no stablin fo' the critters.”

“Oh, I kin find a place fo' them uns,” said Slack, and handing out his daughter she went into the house with Jakey, while the farmer drove off to find shelter for the horses. Jakey wished to go with him, but his father bade him stay with Souri.

The woman of the house was depressed. She was not strong, and the continued successive occupation of the country by Union and Confederate troops for more than a year had completely worn her out.

And now another shifting was at hand. At first she had spoken her sentiments freely. They were with the Confederacy, but lately she had come to endeavoring to find out the sentiments of strangers before betraying her own. Wondering whether she was harboring Unionists or secessionists, she began to question Jakey.

“Reckon you uns live nigh 'bout hyar, don't y', boy?”

“Nigh outer th' Sequach.”

“Let me fill that kettle for you,” said Souri, seeing the woman about to take up a wooden bucket she was scarcely able to lift. The woman suffered her and went on making inquiries of Jakey.

“Thur mixed over thar'. Some's Union, 'n some's secesh. Which air yer paw?”

“Waal, I ben ter skule a year, 'n paw he mought 'a' changed sence I went awny.”

“Don't say ‘mought,’ Jakey, dear,” said Souri.

The woman looked at Jakey inquiringly.

“Y' couldn't 'n' l'arned much at skule ef y' reckon a man's goin ter change sides in this hyar fight. Th' git wusser 'n wusser. Still ef ye'd ben hyar ye'd l'arned thet. Reckon y' ben no'th to skule?”

“We have been north—in Ohio,” said Souri as she put the kettle on the stove.

It was midnight at the little frame house where slept the Slack family. Farmer Slack was awakened by a pounding at the front door. Then he heard the woman by whom they were sheltered get up, and going to the door let some one in. The partition was thin, and every word that was said could be plainly heard.

“Lordy, Ben, whar did y' come from?” asked the woman.

“Tullahomy.”

“Wher y' goin ter?”

“Up inter the mountings.”

“What fur?”

“Ter lay low till the armies move on south. Then we uns 're goin ter hang in the tailens of the Yanks. Thur's better feedin than thur is behind Confederates.”

“Oh, Ben, I wish you'd stop this business. Go 'n jine one o' the armies, I don't keer which. Only stop this kind o' work.”

“Polly, you know I've been driv to 't. What have they left us? Nothin but this house. Ef I didn't rake among the refuse that the Yankees leave behind 'em, whar w'd you 'n th' children be?”

“But why air y' leavin now, Ben? What does 't all mean, the men goin south? Hain't th' goin ter fight at Tullyhomy?”

“Ther gittin outen Tullyhomy this very minute.”

“How d'yo know?”

“I kem from thar this afternoon. The trains were goin outen the place loaded with supplies. What's them things doin thar?”

He pointed to some of the belongings of the Slack family. The farmer could hear the woman caution her husband to speak low, but by that time Slack's ear was at a crack.

“Ther's a family hyar steyin all night,” she whispered.

“Any critters?”

“Two, but I don't want y' ter take 'em, Ben. It's onnateral. Thur's a sweet young gal ez helped me git supper, 'n I wouldn't hev nothin happen to her fur the world.”

“I won't take thur critters tel after y' git me somep'n ter eat. Come, be lively, my dear. I hevn't had a squar' meal in two days.”

“Whar's the gang?”

“I left 'em a mile, t'other side o' th' town. We got ter git inter th' mountings afore th' Federals come along. Whar air the young uns?”

“In thar.”

The farmer could see the man go into a room into which the candle from the one adjoining cast a dim light. The father bent over the sleeping little ones, put his lean face down beside the round, warm cheek of a child and groaned.

“Jakey,” whispered Farmer Slack.

Jakey awakened, but could not make it known, because his father had clapped his hand over his mouth.

“Be still, my boy, till I git yer clothes. Don't yer make no sound fo' yer life. Thur's guerrillas in th' house.”

The farmer got Jakey's clothes and his own. They put them on, using all possible caution. Then the farmer took his son's hand and led him on tiptoe to the open window. Once there, he took him up in his arms, and passing him through it dropped him on the ground a few feet below. Then Slack got through himself and dropped beside Jakey.

“Now for the stable, my son.”

Going across some vacant lots, they reached the stable and took out both the horses.

“Jake,” said the father, “I'm goin to the headquarters of the Federals. I want yer to stay 'n take keer o' yer sister.”

“Souri don't need no one ter take keer o' her.”

The farmer went back into the stable, leaving Jakey to hold the horses, and brought out a saddle and bridle.

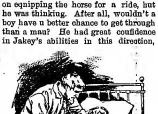
“Waal, Jake,” he said presently, “she's a gal 'n may need y'.”

“What yer goin fo'?”

“T' tell 'em the southern men air gittin outen Tullyhomy. 'T may make a lot o' differ ter th' cause.”

“Why can't I go 'n do thet?”

The farmer made no reply. He went on equipping the horse for a ride, but he was thinking. After all, wouldn't a boy have a better chance to get through than a man? He had great confidence in Jakey's abilities in this direction, for they had been tested long before near the beginning of the war. Then he disliked to leave his daughter without protection in a lawless territory.



“Jakey,” whispered Farmer Slack.

“Jake,” he asked at last, “do y' think y' c'd do 't?”

“Reckon.”

“I kin put y' on th' road 't Manobeeter. Thar or before y' git thar y'll find Yankees. But yer powerful little fo' sich a job.” And the farmer looked at his son undecidedly.

“Do y' think I'm a babby ter be rocked in a cradle?”

“No, Jakey. Yer a 'markable little chap. Thur's not 'nother boy o' your age livin I'd trust to carry this message. I reckon I'll let y' try it.”

Slack took Jakey up in his arms and sat him on the horse. Then he shortened the stirrups till all the holes in the straps were exhausted, when he cut new ones, making the length a proper one for Jakey's little legs.

“Now, Jake,” said his father in a tone that bespoke a desire to put resolution into himself and the boy at the same time, “tell th' Federal general that a guerrilla kem to the house whar we war sleepin and tole his wife thet the southern men air gittin outen Tullyhomy. He kem from thar this afternoon. 'N, my boy, ez I often tole y' afore, remember yer a Unioner 'n hain't afraid o' nothin. Thar's th' road.”

“Tom, you git.”

CHAPTER V.

CARRYING THE NEWS.

Had not Jakey Slack possessed a stout heart he would have quailed at pushing out in the middle of a dark night on a road of which he had no knowledge and possessing the disadvantage of being occupied by neither Union nor Confederate troops. Between the rain and the artillery and the wagons, the roads were all cut to pieces. Water stood everywhere, and often where the way passed over a depression in the ground it was necessary to pass through small lagoons. This in the daytime, when one might keep the road by observing the fences, when there were any, would not have been so difficult, but overshadowed by the great black wings of night there was absolutely no guide save by feeling underfoot or an occasional glimmer ahead indicating that the way lay through an opening in the forest.

Tom floundered along at a very slow pace. Jakey found it not only difficult to keep him in the road, but impossible to keep out of mudholes when on it. Now Tom's fore legs would sink into a soft spot and again would splash into a deep rut, or one leg would be in the rut while the other was on the higher ground. Then he would flounder, while Jakey held on to the saddle with all his strength to keep from being thrown off by Tom's writhings. All the while a drizzling rain was slowly working its way through Jakey's jacket to get at the skin. The boy tried to guide his horse for awhile, but finally concluded thet Tom was far better qualified to find his way than he was himself, and dropping the reins on the pommel of the saddle turned his undivided attention to keeping his seat. Every now and then Tom would stop and look about him, as much as to say, “Jakey, I don't like the looks o' things at all.” But if Jakey understood him he made no comment on the remark. He had placed Tom in command and did not propose to interfere.

Just before morning the darkness grew thicker. Tom had for several miles proved himself worthy of the confidence reposed in him and kept the road, but all of a sudden he brought up against a snake fence.

Jakey was discouraged. He knew Tom had lost the road, and as for himself he did not feel competent to find it again. Bringing the horse sideways to the fence, he slid off on to the top rail and then down on to the ground. Holding the reins and leading Tom—for he dared not leave him, lest he might not find him again—the boy groped around for awhile looking for the road. It was of no use. Go where he would, there were only stumps and grass, every hollow being filled with water.

He thought of lying down in a fence corner to sleep till morning. But he did not like to do this, for fear that, once asleep, he would not wake up till late the next day, and then the southern army might be away from Tullahoma, with all its stores, and perhaps there were a great many other advantages they would gain that caused Jakey, being a good Union boy, to wince, though he could not name them. But there seemed no alternative. It could not be more than two hours before daylight would show him the road, and he reluctantly concluded to go into bivouac. As he was looking for a good, broad, flat rail to stretch himself on, Tom put his nose over his shoulder affectionately and rested it there. Never before had Jakey felt so deeply any interchange of sympathy with a dumb brute.

“Tom, ole critter,” he said, putting his arms about the horse's neck, “this air lonesome.”

And Tom seemed to respond as plainly as if the words were spoken:

“Jakey, you bet.”

Maybe Tom had an object in view more important than an offer of sympathy. Maybe he had something to communicate. At any rate as Jakey stood with his arms around the lowered neck and looking over it he espied a light.

“Golly, Tom,” he exclaimed, “I reckon y' sor't.”

In a moment he had climbed the fence and had regained his place in the saddle. Then, pointing the horse's head directly for the light, with a “Git up, Tom,” rider and horse were soon away in the direction of its appearance.

Suddenly there was an ominous click, which in the stillness of the night sounded with all the distinctness of the cocking of a gun.

“Who comt dare?”

“Mister, can y' put me on ter the road?”

“Who you vas?”

“I'm a boy, I air.”

“Vat you want?”

“I want ter go ter Manchester.”

“Vat for?”

Jakey thought a moment before replying. The question occurred to him, Was this surely a Union picket? No Confederate would be likely to challenge with a German accent.

“I've got some information fo' Mr. Rose—Rose—what's his name?”

“Sheneral Rosecrans?”

“Yes.”

Jakey was led over a stubble field which had not been planted since the previous season and brought before a group of half a dozen tents, the headquarters of the colonel commanding the —th cavalry brigade. The colonel had not yet risen. Jakey's conductor explained to the sentinel on post that the boy had important information, whereupon the sentinel shouted, loud enough to wake the whole army, “Corporal of the guard!” The summoned soldier came, and it was explained to him that Jakey had important information. The corporal went off to fetch the officer of the guard.

“What you want, sonny?” asked that person when he arrived, buttoning a coat he had just put on.

“I don't want nothin.”

“Oh, you don't. I thought you did.”

“Reckon I got somep'n you uns want, but I'm gittin tired answerin questions 'bout it.”

“Well, what is it, my little man?”

“I ain't no little man. I'm a boy.”

“Can't you tell me what you have for us?” asked the officer, smiling.

“Can't tell nobody but somebody big.”

“I don't know anybody bigger than our chief of staff about here. I'll call him.”

So the chief of staff was called up and informed that Jakey had information of the enemy. The chief of staff called up the colonel commanding, who suddenly appeared at the tent door in a pair of trousers and a woolen shirt.

It was evident from the moment the colonel espied Jakey sitting on old Tom in front of the tent and Jakey espied the slender figure of the colonel, with his blue eyes and light hair, that they had met before, not only that they had met, but that they must have been united by some cord of great durability. There were two exclamations like pistol shots.

“Big brother!” from Jakey.

“Little brother!” from the colonel.

Colonel Mark Maynard strode up to the boy, took him in his arms, and Jakey might have as well been in the embrace of a bear for a time, while not a word was spoken. Then there was a fusillade of questions and answers, after which the colonel took Jakey into his tent and sat him on his own camp cot. Jakey lost no time in giving a brief account of his trip from school, how he had slept at the guerrilla's house and how his father had heard of the evacuation of Tullahoma.

The colonel, throwing open the tent flap and seeing his chief of staff outside, called him in.

“Captain,” he said, “ride over to corps headquarters and say that a boy has just come in who is sent by his father to say that he slept last night at the house of a guerrilla, who told his wife, not knowing that he was overheard, that they are getting out of Tullahoma. Say that the information is perfectly reliable, as it has been brought by a Union boy who went with me on my most important mission when I was a scout and rendered me on that occasion the most valuable service a human being can render another. Ride at once. Never mind the division commander. There's no time to spare for army etiquette. Go.”

The captain saluted, and without waiting for his own horse to be saddled mounted the horse of an orderly and dashed away.

HER MIRROR.

A Japanese Story of Its Influence on a Motherless Girl.

At Y. M. C. A. hall Yentaso Okano, a Japanese, told the following story to a large audience:

“Once upon a time there lived in a little hamlet in Japan a young couple. They had one child—a beautiful little girl whom both loved very dearly. It came to pass while the child was still a baby girl that the father was obliged to take a long journey to the far distant city. It was too far for him to take his wife and child, so he left them at home and traveled alone.

“In that great city he saw many new things which, having lived in the peaceful little hamlet up among the mountains all his life, he had never seen before. He desired to take home to his wife some of these new things which seemed to him so wonderful. And the most wonderful gift he could take, it seemed to him, was a mirror. He wished to take home to his wife the pleasure and surprise he had experienced when he first looked into a mirror. So he took one home to his wife.

“When he arrived home he gave the present to his wife, and for the first time she looked into a mirror. ‘What do you see?’ her husband asked. She replied: ‘I declare! I see a very pretty woman. She wears her hair just as I do mine, and she smiles and moves her lips as if she were talking to me.’ Her husband told her that the mirror was a present for her, and he hoped she would use it every day. But the wife thought it far too beautiful and rare and costly a gift to use every day, so she put it carefully away and never spoke about it to the little daughter, who grew more beautiful and more like her mother every day.

“By and by a great misfortune fell upon that little household. The wife and mother fell sick, and it was soon evident that she must die. As she lay upon her deathbed she called her little daughter to her and told her that she was going to lose her mother forever. She could point to no future life after death in which they should be reunited, but in the love and simplicity of her heart she did the best she could. She told her little daughter about the wonderful mirror. ‘After I am dead,’ she said, ‘take down that box and look into the mirror that it contains. There you will see my face. And I want you to look into the mirror every day, that you may never forget your mother, and that you may grow like me more and more every day.’

“So the mother died. The little girl did as she had been told, and in the wonderful mirror she thought she saw her mother's face, young and beautiful—not as she had seen her, pale and ill as she lay dying, but fair and fresh as she had looked before the fatal illness. And the little girl looked into the mirror every day and thought of her mother and her many lovely ways, and so it came about that she grew to be more and more like her mother as the years went by.”—Rochester Post-Express.

THAWING OUT FROZEN MEAT.

A Dark Room Treatment Before Leaving the Cold Storage House.

According to the process invented by Messrs. Nelson Bros. for thawing frozen meat in such a way as to put it on the market in a sound condition and avoid the many objections to which the sale of the meat while still in a frozen state was open, the chamber of the apparatus is provided with double doors, one of which is extremely thick, so as to shut out, as far as possible, all external atmosphere. The chamber has no windows, but is supplied with electric light.

On entering one sees only some 30 quarters of beef hanging in rows on hooks over a slightly raised open platform, with a canvas curtain at the back. Under this platform, however, there is a series of steam pipes, while behind the curtain there is a series of pipes filled with compressed ammonia, similar to those used in connection with the ordinary freezing processes. The steam pipes under the meat cause a current of warm air to ascend all around it, and as soon as this current reaches the top of this chamber it is drawn to the freezing pipes behind the curtain, by which all the moisture is frozen out of it, on to the pipes themselves. It accumulates there in the form of snow some three-quarters of an inch in thickness.

The snow has to be scraped off the pipes from time to time, and it is stated that the accumulation during five days, in the thawing of 30 quarters of beef, has resulted in no fewer than 168 pounds of water. During that same period the meat has lost only 1 per cent in weight. The purpose of the canvas curtain is to divide the ascending warm current from the descending cold current, and it is claimed that the effect of this incessant passing of the air first over the steam pipes and then over the freezing pipes is eventually to free it from all moisture. When the meat is first hung, the temperature of the room is almost at freezing point, but on the fifth day the temperature of the chamber has been raised to that of the air outside. By this time the frost has all been thawed out of the meat, which is then in a condition to be sent to market.—London Invention.

A Real Saving.

The Lady Shopper—What? Pay $5 for a lamp like that? It's outrageous, and I won't pay it.

The Astute Salesman—You forget, madam, that the price has been reduced to $4.99.

The Lady Shopper (reaching for her purse)—Oh, very well then. I'll take it.—Chicago Record.

My Wife is Nervous

Says many a man and too often he is inclined to blame the poor, tired woman who cannot eat or sleep, whose whole life is filled with misery because her blood has become impoverished and her nervous system exhausted. She needs a building up medicine like Hood's Sarsaparilla. A few bottles will enrich and vitalize her blood, tone and strengthen her digestive organs, give her a good appetite, enable her to sleep soundly, banish her nervousness and bring back her smiles. Mr. J. W. Roberson, of Greenfield, Tenn., says: “My wife began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla about three months ago and she is now taking her third bottle. She has been in poor health for fifteen years. Hood's Sarsaparilla is doing her more good than any other medicine she has ever taken. Her appetite is better, she looks better and there has been improvement in every way.”

The Most Enjoyable journey we think we ever made on the North-Western Line from Minneapolis and St. Paul to Chicago. It is indeed, a luxury to ride in its North-western limited. On this train a journey is the pleasantest kind of a pleasant pleasure. It's a fact.—The Journal, Minot, N. D.

THE patent medicine bill now before the legislature is a mischievous measure and should be defeated—as it no doubt it will be.

THE policy of Grover seems to be to so fix things as to give Johnny Bull a good speculation in our bonds—and we will have to pay the fiddler. Grover should go to England to live when his time is completed, this country wont have any further use for him.

THE Hayward murder trial has succeeded in revealing a chapter in family infelicity that is seldom seen. The skeleton in the/closet is very much in evidence—a very prominent feature. It has also shown Harry Hayward to be the nerviest man in America, if not in the world. Such nerve as he has shown is phenomenal.

THE children of this state seem to be peculiarly subject to diphtheria. Anti-toxine is said to be a sure preventive of diphtheria. Anti-toxine is a "patent" medicine and if Dr. Zier's bill, House file No. 48 becomes a law this valuable remedy with many others will be driven out of the state. Farmers should write their members urging them to vote against the measure.

GIBBS' GRAIN BILL.

It Embodies the opinions of the State Inspection Department.

Mr. Gibbs introduced a grain bill which embodies all that the administration will ask this year in the way of grain legislation. It was drawn up by the state grain inspection department, and introduced by Mr. Gibbs at the request of A. C. Clausen, chief inspector, The administration bill of two years ago was defective in various places and the Gibbs' bill seeks to remedy these defects. The country people have had considerable trouble with the railroads regarding the construction of the 1893 law. For instance, the law provides for public elevators along rights of way, and the railroads have held that this did not mean elevators on depot grounds. The Gibbs' bill straightens out this matter. Coming from the grain inspection department without doubt reflecting the best thought of the administration in the matter of grain legislation, the bill will be of general interest all over the state.

Section I re-enacts the 1893 law, adding the words, "depot grounds;" so as to cover the point just referred to. Section 2 provides for licenses for these public country elevators. By section 3 the railroad and warehouse commission, before Sept. 1, each year, and as much oftener as necessary, is to make rules for the government of these elevators and establish rates. By section 4 the elevator owner is to keep correct accounts of the grain received and shipped, stating grade and dockage for dirt, etc. Receipts are to be given for all grain received, and are to state on their faces all necessary facts in connection with the grain, facts which the owners think they have hitherto had some difficulty in having made public. When the owner wants his grain he presents his receipt and the elevator company must turn the grain over to him within twenty-four hours from the time of the demand. Or, if the owner wants his grain shipped to a terminal point, the elevator must make such shipment promptly, and at as small cost as is possible. "No receipt shall contain language in any wise limiting or modifying the liability of the party issuing the same, and any such language, if inserted, shall be null and void."

Under section 5, if there is an difference between the owner of the grain and the elevator company as to grades, etc., the state department of grain inspection is to be appealed to as arbitrator.

Section 6 provides that in case of complaint that the country charter does not give just weights and grades, or is unfair as to dockage, etc., the railroads and warehouse commission is to make prompt inquiry, and to this end is to have full access to all records, books etc. Section 7 says that all country elevators shall whenever requested furnish itemized statements and full reports of all grain received and stored or shipped. Section 8 prohibits pooling on the part of the charter companies. Section 9 provides a penalty—$50 to $500 fine.

The bill is long and filled with innumerable details, all bearing upon the main point alluded to. It is designed to be amendatory to the 1893 act, and the grain inspection department believes will so perfect that act as to perfectly satisfy the farming community.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

From our Regular Correspondent.

WASHINGTON, FEB. 15, 1895.

Representative Walker, of Mass., is by no means alone in thinking that Mr. Cleveland deserves impeachment for his share in that contract for the sale of bonds to a European syndicate, and were it not for the nearness of the end of this congress some steps might be taken with that end in view. The attempt to keep the terms of that contract secret has but added infamy to the contract itself. Under that contract the European syndicate will get, it is estimated, 8 per cent—probably the largest profit ever made on a like issue of bonds of a solvent nation—profit on the $62,400,000, of 3¾ per cent bonds, for no one expects the apparent activity in congress to result in changing the nature of the bonds issued, besides an option upon any other bonds issued previous to Oct. 1, 1890. The senate finance committee has reported a bill for the unlimited coinage of silver, the government to retain the difference between the amount of silver in each dollar and a dollar's worth of bullion on the day the bullion is deposited at the mint, as seigniorage, but it is not certain that its opponents will allow it to reach a vote. The house committee on ways and means has reported a resolution authorizing the issue of 3 per cent gold bonds in place of those sold to the European syndicate, but it has absolutely no chance to even get considered by the senate, to say nothing of being adopted. Thus it will be seen that nothing will be done by congress, and that the enormous profits of the European syndicate are, thanks to the contract drawn by Mr. Cleveland's old law partner and approved by Mr. Cleveland, safe; and the people will have to foot the bill.

Unless there shall be a radical change of sentiment among the senators the senate will insist upon its amendment to the diplomatic and consular bill, making a preliminary appropriation for the laying of a cable to Hawaii. The house has refused to agree to any of the senate amendments to that bill and the bill is now in the hands of a conference committee. Some senators have said that the bill shall never get through without the cable amendment.

The house very often votes one way when sitting as a committee of the whole when votes are not recorded, and another when a regular yea and nay vote is taken. That is just what it did this week, on the proposition to make the pay of the clerks to representatives annual instead of during the actual sitting of congress, as at present. The proposition was twice endorsed in committee of the whole, but when the yea and nay vote was taken it footed 142 against and only 98 for.

The thirteenth anniversary of the Loyal Legion in the District of Columbia, and the eighty-sixth anniversary of the birth of Abraham Lincoln were jointly celebrated by a banquet under the auspices of the Loyal Legion. Hon. Geo. R. Wellington, of Md., spoke to the toast of Abraham Lincoln, which was accompanied by the following sentiment:

Statesman, yet friend to truth; of soul sincere;
In action faithful and in honor clear;
Who broke no promise, served no private end;
Who gained no title and who lost no friend.

Among the other speakers were Senators Manderson and Hawley, both members of the legion. The Union Veterans' Union also fittingly celebrated Lincoln's birthday.

Representative Dolliver, of Iowa, was "jollied" by a fellow member of the house the other day for being a society man. His reply was quick and pointed: "I wish I were; I wish I were. I would give a grand reception, decorate the table and rooms with corn stalks, and pay the farmers of my district what you fellows contribute to these expensive florists."

It is positively stated by those who ought to know that the principal reason why the correspondence between ex-Solicitor General Maxwell and Attorney General Olney, which led to the former's resignation, has not been made public is that it would raise a question of veracity between Mr. Olney and Secretary Carlisle, which would be bound to result in the retirement of one or the other from the cabinet. It is understood, and has been for a long time, that Mr. Cleveland would be very glad to get rid of Mr. Olney, but he fears him too much to attempt to force him out. Mr. Olney is credited with being the only man in the cabinet who has his own way, and it is said that upon occasion he browbeats Mr. Cleveland in a terrible manner, and doesn't always wait until they are alone to do it. It isn't Mr. Olney himself that Mr. Cleveland is afraid of, but the forces which are behind him—corporate wealth.

The Patent Medicine Bill.

Dr. Zier, a member of the House from the city of St. Paul, has introduced a bill requiring that every bottle or package of patent medicine sold in Minnesota shall have printed upon its label the name and proportion of ingredients that it contains. This bill was gotten up for the sole purpose of excluding from the state of Minnesota all patent medicines and will have that effect if it becomes a law, and this would work a great hardship to hundreds of poor people who are in the habit of using these remedies. Hundreds of farmers who live at a distance from any village where the services of a doctor may be had use these remedies in their families with great benefit, but should House file No. 84 be passed they would not be able hereafter to procure any patent medicines whatever, which would be a serious detriment to them. If the farmers will carefully look this matter up they will become convinced that the bill is against their best interests and they will write our representatives to do all in their power to defeat the measure.

McIntosh Items.

(From The Times.)

E. J. Jordahl, of Grand Forks, is making arrangements to ship a large amount of hay from this station to Grand Forks. He has already shipped one car.

A meeting for the purpose of organizing a farmers' co-operative loan company will be held at Johnson's hall next Thursday, at 1 o'clock p. m. The idea is a good one, and we believe that it could be made to succeed.

Three cases of typhoid fever, supposed to have been caused by the use of impure water, have recently been reported from the town of Sletten. The first case was that of T. J. Strom, who is now nearly recovered. The two others are those of Siver Erickson and Louis Lien, both near neighbors of Strom.

Miss Anna Johnson, of the town of Winger, was examined before Judge Benson yesterday, found insane and taken to the Fergus Falls asylum. She has been at the county hospital for some three weeks past, but though not at all violent or troublesome the malady would not yield to treatment and it was thought best to send her to the asylum.

(From The Tribune.)

John Vig was up from Crookston on business yesterday.

A. O. Daniels came up from Crookston on Tuesday's train.

P. T. Scotland, of Crookston was up on business Saturday.

It is understood that a new steamer will be placed on Maple Lake this summer, together with several smaller boats and launches. Great preparations are being made to establish at this lake the coming season, the finest and most popular resort in northern Minnesota. Plans are being laid by several Crookston and Red Lake Falls people to erect summer cottages there as soon as the spring opens.

Miss Maggie Vannet visited relatives and friends at Crookston Saturday and Sunday.

Dr. Scheig is now located in Fertile and has his office in the rear of Dr. Nelson's drug store.

Mr. Samuel Scott, brother of John Scott, of the town of Liberty, has purchased from Mr. Wells what is known as the Rice farm located two miles south of Beltrami. The farm contains about 800 acres under cultivation. Consideration $20,000.

The band has been increased in number by several new members. By next summer we will have one of the best musical organizations in the Northwest.

FOSSON ITEMS

(From the Thirteen Towns.)

The Weyerhausers have purchased 7,500 acres of timber in Cass, Beltrami and Hubbard counties paying therefore $47,500.

John Swanson came down from his timber claim last Thursday, returning this week. He is having his place logged this winter, and will have three or four thousand feet of logs to sell. Mr. Swanson states that a number of private parties are logging their claims this winter, and with the large camps that are working in those towns, a large number of men are thereby finding employment.

A noticeable feature of these otherwise quiet winter days is the number of farm teams coming in at all times of the day with cordwood, or ties, which are being piled up on every available piece of ground near the railroad track. When the winter arrives, the wheat harvest is disposed of and then comes the wood and lumber harvest. Herein lies one important factor in Fosston's prosperity and its advantages over the majority of other northwestern towns. Its people and the majority of its tributary population do not have to depend entirely on their farms.

The majority of the Chippewa land examiners are located between fifty and seventy-five miles from here at present, on the eastern bordering towns of the reservation, but in the course of three or, at most, four weeks, they expect to pull up stakes and return west to the White Earth reservation south of here. After going over the White Earth timber they expect to examine the timber north-east, in the Rainy River regions, and from there to return and complete the work in the northern portion of the Red Lake reserve. Much work, it will be seen, remains to be done before a complete report can be compiled.

Dr. D. McEachran was called last Saturday evening to the fraction, near Lake Bemidji to attend Mrs. Cizner, but his services were called upon to late, as death occured several hours before his arrival there Sunday morning. Mrs. Cizner was 66 years of age and had been ill for about two weeks, but her sickness was not thought serious until a short time before she died. She had been living on her homestead for the past two years, with her family, Mr. Cizner having been called away four years ago, in Grand Forks, N. D. She leaves two sons and a daughter who deeply mourn the loss of a loving mother, and also many who regret to lose a kindly neighbor and a valued friend. The funeral took place on Tuesday afternoon at two o'clock and was largely attended by sorrowing relatives and friends.

THIEF RIVER FALLS ITEMS.

[From The Press.]

W. A. Marin, formerly principal of our schools, was doing business here Friday.

School began again Monday after a week's vacation on account of sickness.

Last Monday Mr. and Mrs. J. N. Whitman received a telegram stating that their son, Fred, who had for some years filled a position as guard at the St. Cloud reformatory, was quite ill at that place and requested their presence there. On Tuesday evening and before they could leave here another message was received announcing the young man's death. They left for St. Cloud Wednesday where Fred will be buried. The whole community sympathize with the sorrowing family.

The work of surveying the river to High Landing was completed Tuesday, seventeen days being consumed in the work. All but three of the men employed returned to the city Wednesday. The survey and measurements show a distance by river to High Landing of 35 miles and an elevation of 38,67 feet at the same point above the surface of the pond here. Besides these measurements the width and depth of the river was taken at every hundred feet.

East Grand Forks Items.

From the Review.

Judge Montague, of Crookston, was in the city Tuesday.

The Grand Forks filtering plant has proved a success. Prof. Vaughn announces that the water drawn from it is excellent drinking water and free from diseased germs.

There is a move on to have Beltrami county attached to the Crookston land district. This would be a great convenience for all parties who have business with the land office from that district. As it is now, they all have to through Crookston and down to St. Cloud and are put to an additional expense of about $45.

Fisher Items.

From the Bulletin.

Joe Ketten who has been attending the institute at Dwight Ill. returned home Sunday morning from Detroit, Minn. where he stopped off to visit friends for several weeks.

The stockholders of the cheese factory met at the Town Hall on Monday night, and elected the following officers: Frank Hamilton, pres. J. B. Merrill, vice pres; M. Sanaker, secretary; Sam Torrison, treasury. The factory is now a sure go, and work on the plant will begin.

On Tuesday last we had occasion to visit Dr. Lankester's office and in going in found him busily engaged examining some objects with his microscope, so we thought we would ask a few questions about it and he in substance gave us the following: "You see," said the doctor, that in these days we need proof, for we no longer group in the dark. This instrument will magnify 3000 diameters, and this little piece just an inch or so long cost me forty-five dollars and that other small piece which we call an Abbes condencer cost me twenty six dollars. I have first been cultivating some of the germs from the sputum of a patient whom I believe has consumption, and you shall see whether the patient has it or not. With that the doctor dropped a drop of specially prepared oil on the object and then put it under the microscope and brought the objective, that is the magnifying lens down in the drop of oil, when lo and behold one could see some little colored sticks stained with magenta, and this the doctor assured us was the Koch's bacillus or the germ of consumption. "That," said the doctor settles the case beyond dispute. Without the microscope it is really pure guessing, but here seeing is believing. These other slides you see here are preparations of sputum from people in the different parts of the county, sent me for examination. It takes about twenty four hours to stain the sputum. If I am in doubt I make a cultivation of the germ in filtered beef tea. Here is some being cultivated in these tubes." Here a patient came in and we are compelled to leave this very interesting subject for the present.

A Trip Through Norway.

Together with three hundred or four hundred of Crookston's most enterprising citizens, it was our pleasure to take a very interesting trip through Norway on Thursday evening, with the Rev. L. W. Squier as a guide and interpreter, and although his pronounciation at times sounded odd to us native Norsks, yet we all got along swimmingly. A little difficulty occurred at the border, owing, no doubt, to the tariff laws, which obliges the revenue officers to search our kiesters and as there were so many of us it took a long time, which made us late in getting under weigh, however all things come to those who wait—we waited and were well repaid. It would be impossible for us to draw a pen picture adequate to do justice to the beautiful scenery that was depicted upon that canvass—nothing short of seeing them can give the reader anything like an accurate idea, and we are glad to be able to say that the M. E. Church edifice was well filled and very many of our citizens saw some of the loveliest pictures they have seen for a long time, and all who did not see them missed a rare treat. Such lovely landscapes, such grand mountain scenery, such beautiful lakes and rivers can nowhere else be found outside of sunny Italy. We trust that Mr. Squier will now feel encouraged to favor our citizens with another entertainment soon.

Deafness Cannot be Cured.

by local applications as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucuous lining of the Eustachian tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh cure. Send for circulars, free. F. J. CHENEY & CO.

SUPREME COURT DECISION,

ready to perform such SERVICE, obtaining grain, and keeping such record, Marcum agrees to pay ten dollars per year. Holding himself ready to perform what service? For what service was the defendant to pay him ten dollars per year? Certainly not for the clerical work for this is included in the provision for the payment of five dollars for storage and clerical work. Not for the services subsequently mentioned in the contract, for which compensation is therein provided. Not for obtaining grain and keeping the record, for they are expressly mentioned. The words "holding himself ready to perform such services," can and do refer only to the building and maintaining twenty grain bins, whereby the defendant could secure at reasonable rates, reasonable facilities for storing and shipping his grain. The contract must be construed as requiring the plaintiff to build and maintain twenty grain bins, so located and constructed as to afford such reasonable facilities for storing and shipping grain, thereby holding himself in readiness to furnish the defendant such bin and facilities on his application and payment of the stipulated charges. A substantial performance on the part of the plaintiff of these terms of his contract was a condition precedent to his right to recover. There is no claim that the plaintiff ever performed such condition, for it is admitted that he never built or maintained any of the twenty bins. The most that is claimed in this respect is that he rented a building wherein he was ready to provide bins or bags. The building was located away from the railroad and was without any facilities for shipping grain. If this was a case where there had been a substantial but not a technical performance of the contract on the part of the plaintiff and the defendant had received and retained the benefits of such performance the defendant could not insist on such technical failure to perform as a defence, but would be limited to alleging and proving his damages by way of counter claim or recoupment.

Leeds vs. Little, 42 Minn. 414.

O'Dea vs. City of Winona, 41 Minn. 424.

But such is not the case, for upon the admitted facts and evidence we hold that there was not a substantial performance by the plaintiff in this case of his contract and he cannot recover.

Bixby vs. Wilkerson, 25 Minn. 481.

Relt vs. Stetson, 26 Minn. 411.

Elliott vs. Caldwell, 43 Minn. 357.

It follows from this conclusion that the alleged errors of which plaintiff complains were harmless and the verdict right.

Order affirmed.

The Barlow Bros. minstrel street parade was a fine one—one of the finest bands that has visited our city in a long time. Frank Hawkins is having a yolly time with a pet big toe. He was not satisfied with it as it was so he went to work and stuck a needle into it a inch or so and then broke off the needle leaving a rod or so of it in his toe. Dr. Just went fishing but failed to catch on and there you are. Frank thinks it's better he cut that big toe off—just below his chin.

Remember the Brownies who will be out in force on Friday and Saturday evenings, Feb. 22d and 23d. The little chaps have worked faithfully and are deserving of a full house each night and Saturday matinee. You now have an opportunity for a display of enterprise by patronizing home industry.

John C. Wells was in the city on Tuesday calling on friends. He has recently sold one section of his land at Edna to a Mr. Scott who will work the balance of the Wells farm. The section that Mr. Scott buys contains the farm buildings which he buys together with all the stock and utensils for a trifle over $20,000. Mr. Scott is an experienced farmer and will no doubt make a success of this venture. Mr. Wells says that as everybody else seems inclined to go out of wheat he shall stay in and will sow the usual amount for one year more at least.

As the statement has been made that Mrs. C. Houston fainted in church on Sunday during the funeral services, we deem it but right to say that the statement was a mistaken one. Mrs. Houston has been an invalid for several years with a nervous disorder of some kind and heart trouble, sometimes causing something akin to spasms. She felt one of those attacks coming on and was led outside where she could have plenty of fresh air and when the procession started she was taken to the house of a friend, where she remained until her husband's return from the cemetery, when she was taken home. Her condition has been very serious ever since this trouble came, but her friends all hope for the best.

A Card of Thanks.

To the kind friends who by their generous actions manifested their sympathy with us in our bereavement we wish to return our heartfelt thanks.

Died.

RAYMOND HOUSTON.

The only son of Mr. and Mrs. Christopher Houston, died at two o'clock a. m., on Friday, of paralysis, after an illness of only a few days. He was born on the 24th day of January, 1886, and was always a bright little fellow, full of life and vigor, giving promise of a long and useful life. The funeral services were conducted at the Methodist Episcopal church, at 2 o'clock. p. m. on Sunday, the Rev. Lee W. Squier preaching a very tender and affecting discourse from the words found in John, 13th chapter and 7th verse: "Jesus answered and said unto him, what I do thou knowest not now; but thou shalt know hereafter."

Notwithstanding the day was very stormy a large concourse of sympathizing friends and neighbors and a very great many children were in attendance, who seemed deeply impressed with the solemn occasion. The pall bearers were Freddie Simmons, Bert Semf, Georgie Lewis, Willie Winne, Eddie Walsh and Elmer Glassford. This is the second son the bereaved parents have been called upon to part with and they have now remaining only two little girls. They have the deepest sympathy of a host of friends.

Herman P. Fisher. Later in the day, if deemed best, services of installation will be held. It is expected that representatives will be present from Grand Forks, Moorhead, Barnesville, Ada, Glyndon, Ortonville, Minneapolis, and the towns of this vicinity. The presence of all the ministers and christian workers of this city is desired. A cordial invitation is extended to the public generally to be present, and participate in any and all of these meetings.

The World's Health.

While we have not room here to produce the statistics in support, it may be confidently asserted that the average health of the world's civilized people is improving with every decade. Two principle causes are progress in both medicine and hygiene. A hundred years ago small-pox was as much dreaded as Asiatic cholera or yellow fever are now. Seventy-two years ago to-day died Dr. Jenner, the man who on May 14, 1796, performed the first inoculation for the prevention of small-pox. To-day his discovery is known and adopted by a majority of physicians in all nations. Pasteur, the Frenchman, has earned the thanks of the world by his inoculation for the cure of hydrophobia. A new triumph of the germ theory of discuse seems to be the diphtheritic anti-toxine, which promises a safeguard against that scourge of child-life. On the side of hygiene, as great improvement has been made in clothing, exercise, cleanliness and food. Especial attention has been directed to the latter, and the efforts of legislators have been persistently used to secure purity of food, while its preparation for consumption has become a science. The public caterers are alive to the demand, and the cooking of America no longer deserves the name of barbaric. Leaders in this food reform have been the great railroad companies, with their dining cars, on which the best and choicest eatables are cooked and served in the finest style. Pre-eminent among all are the peerless dining cars of the Burlington Route, operated on the cafe plan. The many attractions of this line makes it the part of widsom to buy your ticket over the Burlington and this can be easily done by applying to your home ticket agent, or by writing to W. J. C. Kenyon, Gen. Pass. Agent. St. Paul, Minn.

Supposed Murder.

Adam Miller, a Hungarian farmer living near Pembina was found dead in the road last Friday morning and indications pointed to murder. Knife wounds were found upon his person, also a bullet wound. Mr. Miller's wife recently arrived from the old country to join her husband and in her company was a young man who appeared unduly devoted to her and the young man is supposed to be the murderer. A knife belonging to him was found near the spot where Miller's body lay, and a revolver that the young man had bought in Pembina was found in an old well near by. The young man has been arrested and takes things quite coolly, asks for an early trial and seems to be in no wise rattled. The woman in the case also takes things decidedly cool and does not seem to regret the sudden demise of her husband.

Taken to the Supreme Court.

Edward George, attorney for Chief of Police Qalgley, of East Grand Forks, has received a writ of certiorari, issued by Chief Justice Start, of the supreme court, at St. Paul, directed to Judge Ives, and requiring him forthwith to certify to all the proceedings and evidence in the case of the chief, now before the district court at Crookston, to the supreme court, which will review the order of the lower court, when the hearing will be had on April 1.

The REVIEW is the mouthpiece of the men and women who know most about the great topics on which Americans require and desire to be informed from month to month. Its list of contributors forms a roll of the representative men and women of the age.

Subjects that concern the interests of receive constant and special attention. Among topics recently discussed are:

A New Feature for 1895.

The REVIEW will publish in 12 chapters, beginning with the January number, the

Personal History of the Second Empire,

a historical work of unsurpassed importance, which will throw a flood of light upon the chequered career of Napoleon III, and the influences which led to the collapse of his Empire in the gigantic struggle with united Germany, under Wilhelm I, and his Iron Chancellor. It is as fascinating as a romance, being richly anecdotal and full of information drawn from sources hitherto inaccessible, presented in the graphic and vivacious style which "The Englishman in Paris," by the same author, has made familiar to thousands of our readers.

ONLY FIVE PER CENT.

Decision of Importance to Holders of Minnesota State Land Contracts.

ST. PAUL, Feb. 18.—Attorney General Childs has given an opinion concerning the rate of interest that can be lawfully collected from the holders of delinquent state land contracts. He interprets the act of 1893 as relieving the holders of contracts drawing 7 per cent interest by requiring them to pay only 5 per cent interest.

This opinion is of considerable importance to the holders of delinquent contracts, purchased many years ago at a 7 per cent rate of interest. Heretofore they have been regularly paying 7 per cent interest, regardless of the act passed in 1893 reducing the interest to 5 per cent.

The School Fund.

The report of the land department shows the school fund amounts to $10,712,119.60 an increase of $579,252.17 since the last report. The average price of all school lands sold is $5.95 per acre. The permanent school fund will eventually amount to not less than $20,000,000. The fund has already accumulated from the following sources:

Sales of land, $8,630,443.45; amount paid on forfeitures, right of way, etc., $117,505.74; sales of pine timber, $1,578-056.70; mineral leases, $83,575; royalty on iron ores, $66,756.27; profits on sales of bonds, $235,782.44; total, $10,712,119.60.

How It Is Invested.

The school funds in the state are invested as follows:

Cash, $114,870.95; land contracts (including $1,833,920.44 transferred, internal improvement land contracts) $6,711,-863.48; Minnesota funding bonds, 3½ per cent, $159,000 Tennessee settlement bonds, 3 per cent, $1,673,650; Minnesota revenue bonds, 4 per cent, $100,-000; Minnesota building bonds, 4 per cent, $150,000; Tennessee redemption bonds, 4½ per cent; $270,000; Alabama consols, series "A," 4 and 5 per cent, $183,000; Alabama consols, series "B," 5 per cent, $15,000; Alabama funding bonds, 4 per cent, $105,737.50; school district and county bonds, 5 per cent, $1,027,739.72.

Jesse and Olena Jesse, his wife, of Polk County, Minnesota, as mortgagors, to the Northwestern Guaranty Loan Company, a corporation, as mortgagee, which said mortgage bears date the 11th day of September, A. D. 1889, and was duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for Polk County, Minnesota, on the 18th day of September, A. A STRANGE CASE.

How an Enemy was Foiled.

The following graphic statement will be read with intense interest: "I cannot describe the numb, creepy sensation that existed in my arms, hands and legs. I had to rub and beat those parts until they were sore, to overcome in a measure the dead feeling that had taken possession of them. In addition, I had a strange weakness in my back and around my waist, together with an indescribable 'gone' feeling in my stomach. Physicians said it was creeping paralysis, from which, according to their universal conclusion, there is no relief. Once it fastens upon a person, they say, it continues its insidious progress until it reaches a vital point and the sufferer dies. Such was my prospect. I had been doctoring a year and a half steadily, but with no particular benefit, when I saw an advertisement of Dr Miles' Restorative Nervine, procured a bottle and began using it. Marvelous as it may seem, but a few days had passed before every bit of that creepy feeling had left me, and there has not been even the slightest indication of its return. I now feel as well as I ever did, and have gained ten pounds in weight, though I had run down from 170 to 137. Four others have used Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine on my recommendation, and it has been as satisfactory in their cases as in mine."—James Kane, La Rue, O.

Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine is sold by all druggists on a positive guarantee, or sent direct by the Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind., on receipt of price, $1 per bottle, six bottles for $5, express prepaid. It is free from opiates or dangerous drugs.

FUN IN THE GALLERY

THE PHOTOGRAPHER DOESN'T ALWAYS SEE THE HUMOROUS SIDE.

The Woes With Which He Is Beset by All Sorts and Conditions of Men—It Is a Business Where Much Knowledge of Human Nature Is Necessary.

"Oh, my goodness gracious, sakes alive! That's horrid. Why, I wouldn't give a picture like that to one of my friends for worlds."

"But, Miss Blank, you forget that this is only a proof."

"A proof, is it? And what were you trying to prove by making me look like that? That I am 100 years old or had been through a fever before the picture was taken?"

"Miss Blank, I think you are a little unreasonable. This is nothing but a proof, and all of those dark shadows and hard lines will be toned down. I admit, as it is, it does not do you justice"—

"Justice? Well, I should say not. I ain't very conceited about my looks, but if I thought I was as hideous as that picture makes me I'd wear a mask."

This, in substance, is a dialogue in a photograph gallery a few days ago. A woman had "come in to see her proofs," and the clerk had blandly handed the cause of all the commotion over the showcase, behind which she had intrenched herself. The customer, or "subject," as the photographers term their patrons, was mad as soon as she saw the proof. But the diplomacy of the young woman behind the showcase would have given points to a politician. She was thoroughly in earnest or confidential or friendly or a little bit troubled, all in one breath. It was apparent that she had been there before, and she demonstrated that she was well acquainted with the premises. And she was truthful. She knew that it wasn't fair to judge the plate by the proof, and, what is more, she succeeded in convincing the subject that this was the case.

"Very well, Miss Blank," she said when the atmosphere had cleared somewhat. "We will finish some of them, and you come in and see 'em, and if you feel then as you do now we won't ask you to take 'em."

As the door closed the clerk rearranged some photographs of party gowns on the showcase, looked away into space for a few moments and murmured, "Oh, hummie," and then went back and thrust her head into the pokebonnet contrivance where she was making ugly people look a little less so, and there was silence in the room.

"Do you have many cases of that kind to handle?" the photographer was asked.

"Well, no, not many. Of course there are some people who are bound to kick anyway. But I have noticed that such characters have more self conceit than they are entitled to. We have all kinds of people to handle." And then followed a little dissertation which would interest subjects, and particularly the women, who have ever tried and intend to try conclusions with the camera. "The stock remark which at some time nearly every subject utters as she comes into the presence of the camera's cyclops is that she had 'about as soon have a tooth pulled as to have a picture taken.' But that time honored platitude has little excuse for existence nowadays," said the photographer, because in all of the best galleries pictures are taken by short exposure, which is practically instantaneous. The people who know more about photography and the art of getting a good likeness than does the operator often cause him some annoyance and a good deal of amusement.

"In deciding upon a pose for the face," continued the photographer, "we must exercise great care. In the few seconds that we have to look at the subject we must decide (provided, of course, we are allowed to decide) what position of the face will give the best likeness. It is true of almost everybody that one side of the face is quite markedly better looking than the other, and for this reason comparatively few full face or front view photos are taken. But sometimes we have to deal with individuals who insist upon a pose of the face that is distinctly bad. Not long ago a certain man came to me with the protograph of a friend which showed the face in clear profile. He said he wanted a photo of himself in exactly that position. It so happened that the model which he submitted had an unusually good profile, and consequently the picture was quite effective. But my subject's profile was faulty. Indeed he had a nose 'as was a nose.' It was gigantic. I saw right away that a profile of his face would be anything but flattering to the owner, and I tried to break it to him gently.

"'But,' he said, 'you admit that this is a fine photo, and I know that the likeness is excellent. Why can't you get the same results from my face? I think I am quite as good looking as he is, don't you?'

"'That isn't the point,' said I, because I didn't want to hurt the man's feelings. 'You know that no two faces are alike, and I am only telling you that a profile is not your best view.'

"But he wasn't satisfied and insisted on a profile, so rather than anger him I took that view of his face and afterward one which I thought was better. The next day he came in to see his proofs. I showed him the profile first. There was no overlooking that nose. It loomed up like Mount Tom from Smith's Ferry. I pitied the poor chap. He looked up from the proof at me and said:

"'Good Lord! Do I look like that?'

"'The camera doesn't lie about such things,' I replied, at the same time handing him the other proof. He looked a good deal relieved when he saw the second proof. But I could see that he was badly bored about that nose. He looked at first one and then the other proof for a minute. Then he handed both back to me and said in a humble tone, 'You may develop the other one.' And I didn't need to be told which was the 'other one.'"—Springfield Republican.

CURRANTS.

Speaking of raising currants F. T. Haseltine says: "Farmers have sometimes complained to me that their bushes will not bear and ask me why they will not. They say that they can raise good, thrifty bushes but get no currants to speak of. In every case so far, I find that they do not cultivate their bushes after they have been set out the second or third year and that they seldom, if ever, put any manure upon the currant patch. Perhaps this may account for the lack of fruit. My rule is to cultivate the patches thoroughly every season and I use manure freely every spring and my bushes always bear abundantly. This may or may not make the difference but I strongly suspect that it does. As rich as our soil is I should not think of neglecting to manure it freely every year."

ACCORDING TO HARRY

Defendant in the Hayward Case on the Stand in His Own Behalf.

ADRY AND BLIXT UNTRUTHFUL.

Testimony of the State's Leading Witnesses Declared Wholly False.

MINNEAPOLIS, Feb. 23.—Harry Hayward, the man accused of plotting the most cold-blooded murder of modern times, took the stand in his own defense, and told in a rambling fashion of his relations with the murdered woman, Catherine Ging.

He admitted that he had been a gambler for years, and his general hearing and anxiety for quick results did not belie the admission. He assumed a nonchalant manner and appeared insufferably bored at many of the questions put to him by his attorney. His attitude was a good deal like that of a wealthy capitalist forced by a subpœna to testify to some trivial matter before a police court. He did not remember a great deal. For example, the first time Miss Ging gave him money to gamble with, he was not sure whether he won or lost. At other points of his testimony, however,

He Remembered Marvelously Well

—that it was 22 minutes past 7, for instance, when he was at the Ozark on the night of Dec. 3. He betrayed no emotion whatever, and in alluding to his relations with Miss Ging said, in a very matter-of-fact way, "Well, I suppose, we were what you might call lovers."

Hayward was on the stand from 11 o'clock in the morning until court adjourned at 5 o'clock. In the early part of his testimony Mr. Erwin sought to establish by him that Adry had a powerful motive for testifying against him, but the court ruled it inadmissible.

The forenoon session was almost entirely taken up with a statement of his gambling operations and of his acquaintance with Miss Ging, whom he said he had first met about a year previously. In answer to a question as to whether there had ever been improper relations Hayward answered with much warmth that he believed her to be a "true and noble girl both towards me and everybody else."

More Gambling Operations.

At the afternoon session Harry again took the stand and continued his descriptions of their joint gambling operations. After his trip to Chicago in July last, when he lost quite heavily, he quit operating with her and hadn't gambled a cent of her money since.

The defendant was next asked regarding his money transactions with Miss Ging and told of several small loans made during the summer. On Sept. 3 he let her have $1,000.

"Now, how much money did she have of yours before you let her have the $7,000?"

"She had $3,500 all told. The notes were on demand and without interest."

"Now, what was your agreement about the $7,000 loan?"

"Well, I know I wasn't to have any interest in the business. I was to get 9 per cent on my money. I was to take a chattel mortgage on the goods. She broached the life insurance and it was talked of between us."

The question of the insurance policies was then gone into at length. He also explained his manner of carrying money and how he happened to have so many $100 bills.

At this point a recess was taken to air and warm the room, Judge Smith saying that he was tired of sitting up on the bench alone in the cold.

The Day of the Murder.

At the conclusion of his testimony regarding monetary matters, Hayward was asked regarding his actions on Dec. 3—the day of the murder. He said he had purchased a bottle of whisky in the morning, but was going to give it to Miss Ging. He thought it was still in his bathroom. He went to the dime museum in the afternoon, was at Fisher's cigar store at 6:30. On arriving at Ozark he went to his rooms and changed his clothes and then went to supper. He left the supper table at 7:22 and went to Miss Ging's room. It was then about 7:30. Going to Adry's apartments he borrowed some money—$5 or $10. He had intended to call on a lady friend, but changed his mind and went to Mr. Bartleson's residence, arriving there at 4 minutes to 8. He accompanied Miss Bartleson to the theater and on returning reached her home 6 minutes of 11.

At this point Mr. Erwin said he would have to go into another portion of the testimony, and, as it was nearly the hour for adjournment, he asked to let it go over until Monday.

The court agreed, and set the court for half an hour earlier on Monday, 9:30 instead of 10 o'clock.

HARRY HAYWARD'S TALE.

Defendant in the Celebrated Murder Case Continues His Story.

MINNEAPOLIS, Feb. 26.—Harry Hayward, the defendant in the murder trial, resumed the stand at the opening of the court. He had evidently been cautioned by Mr. Erwin not to be too prolix in his evidence, and showed a disposition to condense his testimony. His

C. P. Hiring Men.

To Complete the Duluth & Winnipeg Railroad into Manitoba.

WORK TO BEGIN IN THE SPRING

This Is the Story Now Being Told of the Canadian Pacific's Plans.

From all indications it is evident that the Great Northern and the Canadian Pacific are having a lively contest as to which shall get a direct connection into Duluth from the West, and the presence in England of President J. J. Hill, of the Great Northern, and President Van Horne, of the Canadian Pacific, is said to be closely associated with this matter.

As the situation now stands the Canadian Pacific has gained control of the Duluth & Winnipeg, which was purchased at auction and runs in a northwesterly direction from Duluth to Deer River, a distance of 109 miles. It is stated on good authority that the Canadian Pacific is now hiring men through Twin City agencies to begin work in the spring, on an extention of the Duluth & Winnipeg from Deer River, to St. Thomas a distance of 200 miles. The Cadian Pacific now has no entrance into Duluth, while the Great Northern has only a roundabout connection. If the Canadian Pacific extension is completed it will tap the northern wheat fields near the boundary of North Dakota. This business the Canadian Pacific has never been able to handle owing to its lack of connection into Duluth.

Had the Great Northern secured control of the Duluth & Winnipeg it would have had only about 80 miles of line to build to give it almost an air line from Duluth to the coast and connecting at Duluth with its steamship line to Buffalo. The connecting link being across the level country between Deer River, the terminus of the Duluth & Winnipeg, and Fosston, on the Great Northern road.

INCENDIARISM.

Last week the cottage on Maple Lake belonging to Walter Lee took fire one night and was totally destroyed. The house contained a good supply of furniture, all of which was destroyed, and, as it was not occupied, could have no insurance. It is supposed to have been fired by some person or persons in revenge for arrests made last winter for violations of the fishing laws. On Thursday Constable Glenn went out to the lake and arrested Henry Benjamin and Ralph Stoddard and brought them to this city for trial. They claim that the fire was set by Minor Rood, who last winter was convicted of taking fish illegally, and who, rather than pay a fine, spent thirty days in the county jail. He confessed to them they say. Minor Rood was arrested and taken before Esq. E. E. Abbott at Mentor on Saturday and Benjamin was sent there as a witness. Minor Rood was held to the grand jury but was later taken before judge Benson adjudged insane and sent to the insane asylum.

The Stoddard boy plead guilty to petty larceny and was sentenced to 40 days in the county jail. That was for taking the Improvement Company's ice-house. It is said that Minor Rood, when before Judge Benson, admitted that he had set fire to the Lee cottage and said that he was going to clean out the balance of the cottages when he got back to the lake. Benjamin was bound over to the Grand Jury.

A New County Division Scheme.

On Friday of last week petitions were being handed around for a new county division scheme, the proposed new county to be called Columbia with the county seat at McIntosh. The territory comprises nearly 19 towns and would be nearly square if the fractional towns were filled out. This plan is more sensible, more reasonable than anything heretofore proposed, as it leaves the balance of the county in better shape and permits of the formation of another county north of it as soon as reservation land enough is ready to be taken in. A division on a plan like this would seem to give better promise of success than any other and would come pretty close to winning but the crazy scheme to cut the county into five parts never could win.

DIVERSIFY SLOWLY

Good Suggestion on Creamery Projected by E. Bach.

STUDY THE BUSINESS SIDE

Farmers Should Proceed Slowly in Their Move to Better Their Condition.

E. Bach, in Aberdeen News.

The question of assisting the coming dairy industry is going to be a serious one. If what is reported is true there are many creameries starting up all around us. Many of these projectors, like myself, have no available means, will look to the business men in the towns where they do their trading for assistance, and if such is not given there will be some disappointment and hard feeling engendered. But, my dear sir, you must remember what I said before, that the business men have no means to give or loan.

There is no question but that we must change our mode of farming, and dairying will bring us out of this "slough of despond" quicker than any one thing, but it will be a difficult question to get the means required to start it all around. I am, and have been, an earnest advocate of the dairy industry, and have talked and written about it for many years, but that does not prevent me from seeing the difficulty in the way, and I realize that it will take the efforts of all to devise ways and means to introduce it.

You are mistaken as to the cost of putting a creamery in ($3,000). It will take but little more than half of that sum if you are careful and do not get taken in. Under old conditions such was the cost, but now a well-appointed creamery can be put in at from $1,700 to $1,800; and if you invest more than that you throw away your money. A creamery can be started in such a neighborhood as yours for from $1,000 to $1,200 and less. As the number of cows increase additions can be made. I just had an interview with the representative of one of the great dairy implement firms, and he says a good creamery can be put in by their firm for the above money, and a cheese factory outfit will not cost over $300, exclusive of the building. Terms for these are half cash and half next fall.

But after you have your creamery started the success of your venture is not assured. The dairy business has been a success wherever it has been properly started, and conducted in a business manner, but dairying is no exception to the general rules of business success or failure. Some business ventures in all lines succeed; others fail; not because of any inherent advantages or disadvantages, but because of proper or improper management. You may say it is no trick to milk and feed cows and sell the milk, but it is considerable of a trick to do this and do it properly and profitably.

In the matter of dairying among us now we are liable to run it into a fad, into a hobby, without proper consideration, but just because it is popular; trusting to luck rather than to experience or management for its success, and thus laying the foundation for failure before really beginning. There are now a great many ruins of creameries scattered broadcast over the northwest. Not because success was not inherent in the ventures, but because of mismanagement. Let me beg of you not to repeat the experience; we cannot afford to. Go slow with your investment; take a little time and get to the bottom of the business first. excessive outlay and too heavy expenses have ruined more business enterprises than all other causes combined. Those who have started a small scale have succeeded where others have failed. We have an example here in this city—an exemplification of both statements.

Why cannot you gentlemen begin on a small scale? Put up one room at first as cheaply as will do the work properly. Purchase a separator, and in place of an engine, see if you cannot purchase a second-hand horse power. Such a one can be gotten very cheaply, and it will do the work for a while. To be sure you cannot blow the whistle, but sometimes we pay too dear even for a whistle. Get all the milk you can, run economically in every way and get experience. Let your farmers get experience in regard to handling cows. I know they need it.

Do not expect to get rich the first

Fiber Culture.

J. C. Snow of Minneapolis Gives His Views in the Fargo Argus.

Produce The Fiber and The Mills Will Come.

Fiber Not Exhaustive To The Soil.

It has been truthfully said that history repeats itself. This saying is practically true at this present time in relation to flax and hemp fiber culture in the northwest. The time was some thirty years ago when flax and American hemp was important factors among the products of the west. And the increase of average in the growth of these fiber producing plants from the year 1860 to 1874 was almost phenomenal. Increasing from 50,000 acres (the then total area of growth in this country) to 650,000 in 1874, mainly in the states west of Ohio. Both of these plants were the grown more largely for the purpose than for seed. Combining both the production for fiber and seed purposes for many years these two crop were by far the most profitable of any of the productions of the farm, in the vicinity of the location of the fiber mills. During this period some 250 fiber mill and spinning factories were built in the states of Ohio, Illinois, Indiana and Wisconsin; and Iowa, Kentucky and Missouri involving an investment of something over $10,000,000. The product of the factories, being mainly devoted to the production of bagging and cordage, furnishing 95 per cent of all the bagging used in covering the cotton crop of the south, and all the bale rope that bound the same; again 75 per cent of all the flax and hemp twines used in this country at that time were the product of western spinning factories, from fibers grown on western farms, and if not entirely spun in western factories, western farms furnished the bulk of the material used by eastern spinners.

Unfortunately for this industry congress in the winter of 1872 and 1873 dealt it a killing blow in passing an act opening our ports to the free importation of the fiber productions of India, where labor only costs from 3 to 5 cents per day. This legislation was obtained by fraud and misrepresentation in the interest of eastern importers and manufacturers, interested in foreign fibers. Suffice it to say, hardly three years from this time 90 per cent of all the western fiber mills closed down, and the spinning industry was transferred from the west to the east. And the growth of flax throughout the west degenerated to the growth of the plant for seed alone, and this condition has been maintained from that time down to the present. It is one of the seven wonders that so few people in the northwest realize the importance of this fiber industry and what its possibilities mean for the west. We annually import into this country $40,000,000 worth of fiber of foreign countries not one whit better and much of it inferior to what can be produced on any wheat growing farm in North Dakota. This means a loss of 40,000,000 in the past twenty years to the farmers of the west. Again, the great northwest annually consumes 85 per cent of 75,000 tons of binding twine, 95 per cent of which is made of alien fibers. We could and we should grow the raw materials and manufacture every pound of this article used here in the west.

It is emphatically true that the Dakotas, Minnesota and Iowa are peculiarly adopted to the production of fine fibers, and I make the statement without fear of successful contradiction. That just as fine flax spinning fiber can be grown in these states as can be grown by any country in the world, it is high time that the northwest should revive this dormant industry. The conditions now existing that prevailed when this industry was stricken down in 1873, are far different and are such as to invite capital to an opening for profitable investment. Machinery has been invented within the past few years that largely reduced the cost of manufacturing American grown fibers. Every state in the northwest should offer some substantial inducement to manufacturers skilled in this line, to build mills in all the flax and hemp growing sections of the west. If this was done this industry would be revived, I believe, in as strong proporotions as it did during the period I have already spoken of. The theory that flax is more of an exhaustive crop to land than wheat or other small grains is an erroneous

THE NEW TANNERY

What It Does For the Farmers of Polk County.

A. O. Daniels was in last week that day it snowed and the wind blew so hard, and while preparing to face the storm to go home someone asked him if he did not dread to face such a storm? "Dread it?" said he, "well, I might have dreaded it if my old cow hadn't died a while ago. Look there," he said pointing to a handsome large black robe lying in his sleigh, "does that look like a man ought to be afraid to face any storm with that nice warm robe to wrap up in? Well, that robe came off the back of my old Polled Angus cow and cost me just $2.50 to put it into that shape over here at the tannery. Only for that tannery that hide would have been almost a loss to me—I could have got one and one-half cents per pound for the hide, as it is I add $2.50 and get a robe worth at least $20—it would sell for that quickly—or I could get an elegant coat of it which would be worth $40 or $50. You city people don't seem to realize the benefits that tannery is to us farmers, and thus incidentally to your own trade. It will not be very long before every farmer will be doing just what I did with this hide, and hundreds are already doing it as I saw by the number of hides being there when I went." Saying which he jumped into his sleigh, wrapped up warm in that new robe and drove off home through the storm as warm as toast.

McManus Abroad.

The Elbow Lake Herald says Deputy Collector of Internal Revenues McManus, of Crookston, was an unwelcome visitor here Saturday, and raked in a nice little "jack pot." Olson & Hendricks and John Christenson were the victims who afforded entertainment for Mr. McManus. The former had sold beer in larger quantities than five gallons without a wholesale license, and, as a sale was on record upon their books some time back, $150 was required to reinstate them into the good graces of your Uncle Samuel. Mr. Christenson's case was a peculiar one. During his entire business career in Elbow Lake, he never kept whiskies or brandies in his drug store. All calls of this nature upon prescription have been directed to the saloon. However, several years ago Mr. Christenson himself went to the saloon and procured a flask of liquor for a lady and neglected to take the lady's money in advance. Again Uncle Sam was so scrupulous as to who should run errands that he taxed Mr. Christenson $112.50. While this may be good law, the exaction of money in the latter case is rank injustice.

MARCH.

Our calendar year has, in passing through the formative process, seen as many changes as perhaps as any of the other institutions by which we live. In the Roman (ecclesiastical) calendar, until the year 1752, March was the first month, and the legal year began March 25. In France March was reckoned the first month of the year until 1564, when, by an edict of Charles IX., January was declared the commencing month. Scotland followed France in 1599, but the English delayed the change for nearly a century. The selection of March as the commencement of the year was not so inappropriate as it might now seem to us, for in that month, in the temperate zone, nature really begins to live again; the trees send forth buds, wild animals come out of their dens, and the wild fowl commence their northward journeys. It is, too, the time when the year's outdoor business begins; when the "mover" is looking for a new country and cheaper lands; the business man, for a new location or a place for a branch. If you want to travel anywhere this spring, for business, pleasure, or visiting, select the Burlington Route as your railroad line if possible. For information concerning the many places accessibly by its trains, call on your local ticket agent for maps and time tables, or for more complete information write to W. J. C. Kenyon, Gen. Pass. Agent, St. Paul, Minn.

FOREIGN COMMISSIONERS

WANT TO KNOW YOU KNOW.

They Are Asking the Different Boards of Trade to List All the Farms that Are for Sale in the Red River Valley, With All the Facts Thereunto Pertaining.

AND LET THEM KNOW.

Our readers will remember the visit to Polk county of the foreign commissioners who came to look us over and report. The JOURNAL at that time predicted that it would be of great benefit to this country and so it proves. One day last week we received a letter from the Board of Trade of Minneapolis who wants to get a list of all the farms for sale in Polk county to submit to those commissioners, and suggests that every man who has a farm to sell write to the "Secretary of the Board of Trade, Minneapolis, Minn.," and he will send the proper blanks to be filled out and returned to him, when he will forward them to the commissioners. If you want to sell your farm here is your opportunity—it will cost you four cents for stamps and a little time writing.

New Loan Company.

A scheme is on foot at McIntosh for the organization of a farmers' mutual loan and trust company. While this may be a good idea enough it strikes us that if we were a farmer living near McIntosh we had rather see a cheese factory start up than a loan factory—we had rather make money than to borrow it. Or a creamery, both conducted by practical dairy farmers. Ever since the United States was a yearling history tells us that in the dairy localities you always find your prosperous farmers, while the impoverished ones are found where all wheat is the prevailing idea. If it is true that history repeats itself then it must be true that our farmers can make more money from dairy products than from grain raising, especially wheat. There are cows enough in Polk county to start with and with cheese factories and creameries dairy herds would grow with wonderful rapidity and our county would soon be rich and prosperous. This at least has been the experience where it has been tried.

Better Times.

Several sales of farms recently, together with many inquiries for good farms for sale, indicates a fairly good business in real estate this spring. The JOURNAL is aware of some 25 or 30 sales already made and well along, which does not look as though business was entirely suspended. In fact in the past winter there has been a great many real estate transfers, more than in some years when the prospects seemed more propitious. Of course the prices are very low and this is just the time to buy for if it is true that "history repeats itself" the turning point must be near at hand, and values of all kinds will rise. If you think of buying a farm in the Red River Valley now is the time to catch on.

Froze to Death.

Last week we noticed an account of the death by freezing of a party of hunters in Louisiana, some distance south of New Orleans. They went out for a hunt one day and did not return that night, but their friends were not alarmed, thinking that they had stayed at the home of some friend. As the next day passed without their return a party was sent in search of them and after a long search their bodies were found in a piece of woods imbedded in snow. The had frozen to death. Now if these hunters had been hunting in Minnesota instead of such a beastly cold country as Louisiana they could not have perished with the cold—last week.

Good Prices.

With the sole exception of wheat the prospects for good prices for farm products next season are very bright and there is every reason for our farmers to be encouraged. The result will be probably that comparatively very little wheat will be raised and flax, barley, oats and potatoes will be the staples. It is a good time to think about and prepare for that small fruit patch.

CHAPTER VI.

TULLAHOMA.

Colonel Maynard was ordered to push forward down the road from Manchester toward Tullahoma in order to test the truth of Jakey Slack's information. Jakey begged permission to go with him, but the colonel told him that he had better go back to his father and sister. Jakey argued that he could as well return from Tullahoma if they should reach it, and, if not, from any point where they might halt. The colonel at last consented, and as they rode off he remarked to the members of his staff, using the conventional military phrase for announcing a staff officer in orders, "Gentlemen, this is Jacob Slack, volunteer aid-de-camp to the colonel commanding the —th cavalry brigade, and will be obeyed and respected as such." The announcement, couched in these terms, so delighted Jakey that he came well nigh losing his balance and falling off old Tom's back and getting himself trampled on by the rest of the staff. But after the first flurry he made a most efficient aid-de-camp—that is, if riding close beside the colonel and being always ready for an order which was never given constitutes a good staff officer.

About noon the fortifications around the town of Tullahoma suddenly appeared before them. Though it was plain now that they were not to be defended, the advancing force half expected to see a cloud of smoke burst from them. But they were silent and impotent, without troops to man them.

Dashing from the edge of the wood, Colonel Maynard, followed by Jakey and the rest of the staff, rode over the intervening space, and in a few minutes were climbing the slanting sides of the earthworks. A point had been gained which, without the previous maneuvers, would have cost thousands of lives. Even Jakey Slack, who can hardly be called an educated soldier, experienced a certain comfort on riding unopposed over breastworks so formidable. Once within them, he got off his horse, and seeing a big siege gun from under which the carriage had been burned climbed on to it and sat a-straddle, waving his hat and cheering as vociferously as if the victory had been exclusively due to his own genius.

His hilarity was suddenly quenched by the colonel, who, riding up to him, told him that the brigade was ordered forward in pursuit of the retreating enemy, and that he must go back to his father and sister. Jakey begged hard to go on, but his appeal was unavailing. His brief dignity must be resigned. From aid-de-camp on the staff of the colonel commanding the —th brigade, "to be obeyed and respected as such," he must be reduced to the level of a small boy.

The colonel gave him a hug before parting and told him that he would send a trooper with him to see him safely on his way. Had Jakey been a soldier his action on this occasion would have been considered by any court martial rank mutiny.

"D'y' think I hain't nobody nohow? Didn't I go with y' last summer ter Chattanooga when y' war nuthin but a scout? 'N didn't I stay in jail with y'? 'N now yer talkin 'bout sendin a sojer with me fo' a nurse."

"All right, Jakey. Go it alone if you prefer it."

The colonel rode away, and Jakey, shorn of the plumage he had worn so becomingly for a whole half day, proceeded on his return journey. He first inquired the most direct route to Hillsboro, and having been directed to it he set off at a brisk trot. He had eaten nothing since early morning and was ravenously hungry. At a farmhouse by the way he secured a meal for himself and a good feed for Tom. Then the old woman who furnished them gave him a kiss and started him again on his journey.

Jakey had not gone far before he came to a road connecting Hillsboro with the McMinnville branch of the railroad at a place called Concord. The road on which he was traveling forked into the other at an acute angle, the two running nearly parallel for a short distance. Looking ahead toward the fork, he saw a rig which struck him at once as being astonishingly familiar. It was none other than the rawboned horse and paint bereft buggy he had seen several times before. As it drew near, Jakey could see some one in the buggy, and he was not long in recognizing the peculiar dress of Miss Betsy Baggs.

"Hello, Miss Baggs! Whar y' goin at?" he called.

Never a word spoke Miss Baggs. She sat bolt upright in her buggy, regarding the boy fixedly as Bobby Lee triangulated onward. As she passed she turned her head slowly, keeping her spectacles on Jakey with an unearthly stare. There is something superstitious in all human beings and especially in boys. Something like a shiver ran down Jakey's back at sight of this singular person, who knew him perfectly, yet who passed him, her head turning mechanically, without uttering a word. For a moment he was tempted to believe that Miss Baggs had perished, and this was her ghost going to seek rest in some other land than war scarred Tennessee. But this feeling was momentary. Throwing it off, he shouted:

"Shell I give yer love ter Rats when I see him?"

If Miss Baggs was trying to make the boy believe he was mistaken, or that he saw her disembodied spirit, her effort failed signally at this point. A peal of suppressed laughter came back on the breeze to Jakey. Looking after her, he saw the back of the buggy, from which streamed the tatters of the top and under it Bob Lee's four legs mingled in inextricable confusion, doing some of their best work.

"She uns hain't bent on no good," said Jakey to himself as he gave Tom a jog. "Reckon she's up ter somep'n."

Jakey rode on musing upon Miss Baggs. He had noticed her kind treatment of his sister, and as Jakey was disposed to regard Souri the most important person on earth after Colonel Maynard Miss Baggs had thus found her way into that youthful something or other which for want of a better name may be called Jakey's heart. His remark was made with great seriousness. Jakey felt that it was his duty as a Union sympathizer to put some one on Miss Baggs' track. "She mought be worken fo' the Confederates," he mused, "'n then agin she moughtn't." The latter view was most agreeable to him, because he liked Miss Baggs and would grieve to see any harm come to her.

While he was jogging along, turning the matter over in his mind, he saw several horsemen in blue and yellow come tearing down the road. They reined in when they came up with him and opened a volley of questions.

"Say, boy, did you see a woman with a striped dress and goggles go by?"

"'N a long legged wind busted critter?"

"Yes."

"'N an ole rattlin buggy?"

"Yes."

"What d'y' want with her?"

"Never mind that. Have you seen her?"

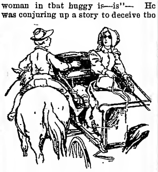
"Waal, never mind whether I have or not. Git up, Tom!"

This brought the questioner to terms.

"Are you a Confederate boy?"

"Don't I live in Tennessee?"

"I suppose that means you are Confederate. We've no time to lose. The woman in that buggy is—is"— He was conjuring up a story to deceive the stupid looking boy before him and get the required information, but he was not good at inventions. Jakey came to the rescue.



"Hello, Miss Baggs!"

"Wanted by you uns' general or colonel or somep'n?"

"Yes."

"Fo' ter keep her outen danger coz she's like nuff to run inter a guerrilla camp?"

The man looked wonderingly at the boy, who was making a story for him unasked.

"Y-e-s," he replied, uncertain what to say.

"Waal, she's gone along thar. When y' git ter th' fork in th' road, take th' left fork."

"All right. Thanks, my little man," and the party galloped away to take the wrong road on reaching the fork.

Jakey pursued his course meditatively.

"Reckon that wurn't me done thet. 'T must 'a' ben some un else. I air a Union boy, I air. She un's Confederate. Like nuff some un got spicion of her. Reckon I can't be Union ef I helped her out. Waal, she likes Souri anyway. Reckon she won't do no harm."

Notwithstanding the view taken at the close of Jakey's soliloquy, he felt very much dissatisfied with himself. He rode on thoughtfully, wondering what Colonel Maynard would say if he should know what he had done. He soon met a soldier on a lame horse. Jakey inferred thet he belonged to the party ahead, but had been obliged to drop out of the chase.

"Say, mister," called the boy, "what them uns chasin thet woman in the buggy fo'?"

"Did you pass her."

"Yes."

"Put 'em on the track?"

"Reckon."

"She tried to slip through the lines on a forged pass. The guard was suspicious and took the pass to headquarters—after letting her go through, though, like a fool—when the trick was discovered."

"Waal, reckon they'll ketch her," and Jakey rode on.

As the dusk of the evening was coming on Tom was seen by Farmer Slack far down the street advancing at a jog trot and on him Jakey, bobbing up and down, his elbows stuck out on each side and his little legs at an obtuse angle with the rest of his body. Riding up to the little porch in front of the house, Jakey slid down from Tom's high back with as much dignity as he could command on descending from such a height. The whole household, including the children, was there to receive him, and Jakey was about to give them an account of how he had served on Colonel Maynard's staff when he caught his father's eye.

"You, Jake," said Mr. Slack, "didn't I send y' out ter th' barn ter look arter the critters last night, 'n now yer been ridin all over, nobody knows whar. Whar y' ben?"

"Waal," said Jakey, taking his cue readily, "I foun Tom loose, 'n I follered him all over th' United States."

"I'm glad y' got him," replied the father. "Go in 'n git yer supper."

CHAPTER VII.

OLD FRIENDS MEET.

It was the middle of August before the different columns of the Army of the Cumberland began to cross the mountains between it and Chattanooga in pursuit of the Confederates who had withdrawn to that place and there intrenched themselves. Meanwhile the Slack family had arrived at their home near Jasper, in the Sequatchie valley. Much to Souri's surprise, everything about the place looked uncouth. When she left it a year before, it was all she had ever known. A ten months' residence in the north, surrounded by every comfort, associating with the daughters of refined people, had made a great change in her. Now the furniture appeared dilapidated, the rag carpets rough. Indeed there was a disappointment about "sweet home" that she had not expected. Nevertheless she did not sit down and repine over it. She had no means of procuring anything better, but she found that she could do a great deal of patching. With considerable forethought she had brought some cheap material of different kinds with her from the north, and this she used to the best advantage. She made neat valances for the beds, cushions for her mother's rocking chair, scarfs for the bureaus—in fact, with very little she made quite a revolution in the house.

Her great anxiety was her brother. Jakey had attended well to his studies while at school, but his teachers had found it impossible to change his methods of expressing himself. As soon as he reached Tennessee he began to relapse into the state of semibarbarism in which he had lived before the coming of his advantages. Souri knew that there was no hope for improvement in her father and mother. Instead of troubling them when their ways of acting and speaking shocked her, she refrained from comment, but when Jakey dropped into his old ways she tried hard to check him. Besides she felt that it was necessary to keep a strict guard over herself, for she had noticed that when under any excitement or when her feelings were deeply touched she was apt to forget herself and be once more the "poor white" girl of former days.

There was another cause of solicitude as to Jakey. It must be admitted, notwithstanding Jakey's good points and a certain original shrewdness there was about him, that he never was the same boy after his few hours of service on Colonel Maynard's staff. It was constantly "when I war Colonel Maynard's aid-der-camp," or "when the colonel 'n me rode inter Tullyhomy," or "when I carried the news of the revacuation." Then he would strut about with his hands in his pockets, much to his father's amusement and Souri's dread that he would run away and join the Union army. But one day when he threatened to do so Souri took him to task for it and made him promise that he would not. This ended her anxiety, for Jakey would as soon have forgotten his military honors as break a pledge to his sister.

The Army of the Cumberland was now advancing by every possible route toward Chattanooga. One of the routes taken by the Union army lay through the Sequatchie valley and directly past the Slacks' little farm. One evening Souri was leaning over the gate thoughtfully when she saw several mounted men in blue, with yellow facings, trotting down the road. They were the first bluecoats to appear of the host that was coming. There is a certain jaunty air, a devil may care appearance, about a trooper who becomes used to being always on horseback. Each man and horse seemed the same animal. Their sabers clanked in unison, and they were chatting and laughing as if they had come to the south with only the most peaceful intentions. When they reached the gate where Souri stood, one of them, lifting his hat politely, asked.

"Would ye mind me goin to the well for a little water?"

In the brilliant display that was revealed by the lifting of the man's hat Souri recognized a head she could never forget—the head of Corporal Ratigan.

"Why," she said, "ain't you Corporal Ratigan?"

"I am, me young lady, and if Oi'm not mistaken ye're one of the party thut was goin through the lines one day a few weeks ago."

Jakey at this moment came around the house in a fashion at which he had become expert at school. This was turning handsprings sideways like a cart wheel. Seeing the soldiers, he suddenly remembered his dignity as former volunteer aid-de-camp, and straightening up pulled his hat down over the back of his head and tried to look military. True, his hair was in his eyes, but his military training had only been for one morning, and Jakey's hair was always in his eyes. Doubtless it would have required months of training from a drill sergeant to get it to growing any other way. Approaching the fence, he climbed it and sat with one leg on each side of it.

"Do ye know me, me boy?" asked Ratigan.

"Does I know one o' them signal lights on th' mountin?"

"Oh, Jakey," sighed his sister.

"Wall, me lad," pursued the corporal, laughing. "Who am I?"

"Rats."

"I see ye have a good memory. Rats. It's quare ye should have remembered that." And the corporal chuckled good naturedly.

"Mebbe y' remember some un's name."

"And who is that?"

"Miss Baggs."

"Certainly I do," said the corporal somewhat startled and confused.

"I sor her t'other day."

"Ye don't mean it?"

"Reckon I do."

"Where?"

"She war a-trottin thet ole critter o' hern, goin no'th like shot from a squirrel gun."

"Upon me word!" ejaculated the corporal, evidently much interested.

"Reckon she war up to somep'n."

"What makes ye think so?" And Ratigan changed his position in his saddle uneasily.

"Waal, when we uns met her"—

"Oh, Jakey, please don't say we uns," interrupted Souri.

"Waal, when we met her onten th' reach o' you uns (Souri gave a despairing look, but said nothing) she talked peart nuff, 'n she knowed me, too, but when she passed me on th' road t'other day no'th o' th' Union army she only stared at me through her goggle eyes 'n didn't say nothin nohow."

"And what do ye suppose that was for?"

"Reckon she wer in a hurry 'bout somep'n 'n didn't want ter stop 'n talk or nothin."

"Did you speak to her?"

"I asked her ef I c'd give her love ter Rats when I sor him."

Corporal Ratigan's Irish good nature triumphed over his desire to reach down and give the boy a cuff. Jakey's countenance was solemn, as usual, and did not break into a smile in response to the corporal's embarrassed laugh. He opened the gate, and Ratigan rode into the yard, followed by his troopers. They refreshed themselves from a gourd which hung in the wellhouse; then, filling their canteens, they rode away.

But Souri and Jakey were destined soon to meet one who was of far more consequence to both than Corporal Ratigan. The next morning while Souri was setting the house to rights she heard the beating of innumerable horses' hoofs. Going to the window and looking up the road, which stretched northward for a long distance, in full view she saw a column of cavalry approaching.

Before the head of the column had reached the house the whole Slack family were standing in the yard gaping. Two regiments passed, though each seemed like an army, for cavalry occupies three or four times the space of infantry. Between the second and third regiments was a gap of a few hundred yards. In this rode an officer especially noticeable for his youth and manly beauty, attended by his staff and escort. On approaching the Slack cabin he motioned to these to go on, and wheeling his horse from the road unattended rode up to the party of lookers on. Jakey, who was standing on the fence, gave a spring and was caught in his arms.

"Aha, little brother, we meet again."

But there were others to engage the speaker's attention. Dropping the boy to the ground, he dismounted and was soon warmly shaking all by the hand.

"Yer Mark Malone, I reckon," said Farmer Slack, "though y' don't look much like the common sojer ez kem 'long hyar a year ago 'n changed yer uniform fo' our Henery's store clothes."

"Not Mark Malone—that was a fictitious name—but Mark Maynard. No. I'm not a private any longer. I command this brigade. And it's a splendid body of men. I'm proud of it."

When Colonel Maynard came to salute Souri, there was an unspeakable interest, sympathy, even tenderness, in her expressive eyes.

"Why, Souri, you're a woman. How you have improved!"

A slight flush on her cheek showed the pleasure the words gave her.

"Hain't I improved?" asked Jakey.

"Improved? Certainly. Have you conquered your old habit of answering people with questions?"

"Did I lick Johnny? Oh, yes," suddenly recollecting himself. "I purty nigh got over thet."

"So I perceive," said the colonel, smiling. "You're a perfect paragon at expressing yourself."

"Won't yer come in 'n set down?" asked Mrs. Slack.

"Not now. I am going to meet my wife, whom I have not seen for nearly a year. I expect to find her at her mother's plantation near Chattanooga. You remember how she hid me when my neck was in a halter on that very plantation; how I came north in disguise with her; how I came here one night, where I had left my horse and uniform, and dashed away to the Union lines; how she followed me, and we were married by a chaplain. Well, I've never seen her since a week after our marriage. Old Pap is famous for not allowing women in camp, and he made no exception in Mrs. Maynard's case except for one week's honeymoon in recognition of service rendered the cause."

"And yer wife's gone back onter the plantation?" said Mrs. Slack.

"She has. You see, in June a recruit entered our family quarters in the shape of a ten pounder boy. Before that happened Mrs. Maynard went through the lines to join her mother, Mrs. Ro. As the youngster is not old enough to report to his father since his enlistment, I suppose his father will have to report to him."

"I reckon Mrs. Maynard'll be right glad to see you," remarked Souri feelingly.

"I shall certainly be right glad to see her. And that must account for my leaving you so soon. I owe you all a great deal in this household, and now that our forces occupy the country, if you require anything, let me know it. What can I do for you?"

There was silence for a few moments, which was broken by Mrs. Slack.

"Waal, now, colonel, d'ye know I hain't had a cup o' coffee fo' nigh onter a year?"

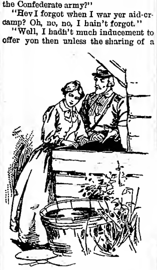
"You shall have some as soon as I can reach my commissary. Anything else?"

Souri frowned even at the request of her mother, and no one named any other requirement.

"Jakey," said the colonel, "you haven't forgotten how, when I went through here a year ago, I asked you to go with me on my way to Chattanooga to get information of the movements of the Confederate army?"

"Hev I forgot when I war yer aid-cr-camp? Oh, no, no, I hain't forgot."

"Well, I hadn't much inducement to offer you then unless the sharing of a prison may be called an inducement. Now, if you will go along, I'll promise you the best that Mrs. Maynard can provide at the plantation. Will you go?"



"I thank you very much."

"Will I? Course I will. Paw, can I hey Tom?"

"Sartin, boy," and the farmer turned and went to the barn.

"Won't you need a—a luncheon?" asked Souri, whose hesitation was an effort to avoid the word "snack," the only name she had known for a cold bite before she went north to school.

"Oh, no," said the colonel. "We shall ride directly to the plantation. We'll get plenty to eat when we arrive."

Meanwhile Jakey had followed his father to the barn. Mrs. Slack stepped into the house to make up a bundle for the boy. Maynard and Souri sauntered aimlessly in the yard. Presently they found themselves at the wellhouse. Souri leaned over it and looked down into the well. There was something she wanted to say, but found it difficult.

"I thank you very much for what you've done for me," she said.

"Why, Souri, what have I done for you compared with what you did for me?"

"Didn't you find me a 'poor white' girl a year ago, and haven't you sent me to school, with Jakey, and helped me to look into a world that would have been always closed to me except for you?"

"And wouldn't my world have been entirely closed to me except for you?"

Souri was silent.

"Souri, when you speak to me of obligation you remind me how deeply I am obliged to you. When I was imprisoned at Chattanooga, charged with being a spy, tried, convicted and about to be hanged, you came and effected my escape. Why, child, were it not for you my bones would this minute be moldering in the jailyard at Chattanooga."

"But Mrs. Maynard, she"—

Souri paused. She was bending low over the side of the wellhouse, her face in the palms of her hands, her elbows resting on the board beside the bucket, and looking down as though seeking for something in the dark disk below.

"She completed what you began," the colonel finished for her.

"It was more for her to do. 'Twasn't noth—anything for me. You uns—you was Union, and so was I. She was Confederate."

There was a depth of feeling in Souri which threw her off her guard and made it difficult for her to adhere to her training in expressing herself.

"Souri, I am indebted to two lovely women for every breath I draw. You opened my prison doors. She who is my wife concealed me when I was hunted for my life. Let us talk no more about it. The very mention of the narrowness of my escape gives me a choking sensation about the neck."

Jakey came trotting out of the barn on Tom, the rim of his felt hat flapping up and down at each step.

The farmer followed, and Mrs. Slack came out with Jakey's bundle. Then with a handshaking all around, and a "God bless you, my little girl," from Maynard to Souri, the two started on their way, not on foot, as on their former journey, but each with a good mount.

Just the Same.

She stood at the window of the water tax office, and the clerk to whom she had paid her bill asked her what else he could do for her.

"I want a receipt," she answered.

"Madam," said the clerk, "this is not a cooking school. We give receipts, not recipes, here."

"All right," she twittered. "I don't care what you call it. I know I had to stew and boil to get the money to pay it. S'long." And she pocketed the paper and sailed off.—Detroit Free Press.

The Human Electrical Forces!

How They Control the Organs of the Body.

The electrical force of the human body, as the nerve fluid may be termed, is an especially attractive department of science, as it exerts so marked an influence on the health of the organs of the body. Nerve force is produced by the brain and conveyed by means of the nerves to the various organs of the body, thus supplying the latter with the vitality necessary to insure their health. The pneumogastric nerve, as shown here, may be said to be the most important of the entire nerve system, as it supplies the heart, lungs, stomach, bowels, etc., with the nerve force necessary to keep them active and healthy. As will be seen by the cut the long nerve descending from the base of the brain and terminating in the bowels is the pneumogastric, while the numerous little branches supply the heart, lungs and stomach with necessary vitality. When the brain becomes in any way disordered by irritability or exhaustion, the nerve force which it supplies is lessened, and the organs receiving the diminished supply are consequently weakened.

Physicians generally fail to recognize the importance of this fact, but treat the organ itself instead of the cause of the trouble. The noted specialist, Franklin Miles, M. D., LL. B., has given the greater part of his life to the study of this subject, and the principal discoveries concerning it are due to his efforts.

Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine, the unrivaled brain and nerve food, is prepared on the principle that all nervous and many other difficulties originate from disorders of the nerve centers. Its wonderful success in curing these disorders is testified to by thousands in every part of the land.

Restorative Nervine cures sleeplessness, nervous prostration, dizziness, hysteria, sexual debility, St. Vitus dance, epilepsy, etc. It is free from opiates or dangerous drugs. It is sold on a positive guarantee by all druggists, or sent direct by the Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind., on receipt of price, $1 per bottle, six bottles for $5, express prepaid.

THE papers announce that J. J. Hill and wife have sailed for home from Europe and are expected home in St. Paul in a few days.

THE pops—what there are left of 'em in Minnesota, are in a row among themselves and it is said the result is liable to be a branch organization. Somebody said that Ignatius Donnelly is seeking excuse to get into the Republican party, but we trust that this is only a rumor.

AND still another petition to divide Polk county springs up. This one provides for three counties with a county seat at McIntosh, one at Thief River Falls and one at Crookston. We suggest as an amendment that the county be divided on township lines and thus settle the question forever.

IT looks as though Gov. Clough is not fulfilling the recommend that his fellow-townsmen (i. e. the Washburn crowd) gave him, for he persists in being as good a governor as Minnesota ever had. The Washburn crowd persistently stated that he was no good anyhow, that is not for a governor aayhow. He is foolin' 'em plenty.

THE Hayward trial drags its slow length along but as all things earthly must come to an end we suppose this will end—some day. The prisoner, Harry Hayward, has testified at last but as near as we can get at it he had much better kept still. He is a good deal like the parrot you read about—he talks too much and too flippantly. We can't see how that jury can fail to convict.

THE editoral association at St. Paul last week decided not to form a business association at this time. The excuse given was that a business organization would disarrange the social features of the association. However, those who had the matter in hand have not given up the idea of forming a business association and will call a meeting later to see what can be done.

THE Guaranty Loan Company wrecker, Louis F. Menage, writes to a friend in Minneapolis from some quarter of the globe, that he would like to come back and "save" the pieces if he can be quaranteed immunity from the indictments that are hanging over him. There must have been something that he forgot to take along in his harried flight, but it certainly was not his check.

IF Senator Ringdal's bill to establish an experimental farm in Polk county becomes a law the farm will be located on section 19 in the town of Crookston, and it is thought that he will succeed in doing it. This would be a grand thing for Polk county in more ways than one and the senator will deserve great credit if he gets it. He has worked hard to accomplish it anyhow.

DIVISION OF COUNTIES.

Under this head the Duluth News Tribune says:— If a county divided against itself share the fate of a house in the same condition, Polk county is in a bad way. New propositions to divide the county are coming up every day. Every village wants to be a county seat. Up to the present time the aspirants are McIntosh, Thief River Falls, Crookston, East Grand Forks, Fertile, Fosston, and Red Lake Falls. If all the petitions now in circulation are granted the county will be divided into eight parts.

The agitation calls once more to mind that Minnesota possesses some very large counties and that even such a wholesale division as that asked in Polk county might be carried out and still leave very respectable area for each one of the fragments.

Division of counties is well enough in its way. But it should not be carried too far. There are numerous counties which, in time will be too large and as there is gradual development there must be changes, but there is no need for haste. Each new county means added expense and this should be incurred only where there will be corresponding benefit.

Hallock News:— A large crowd gathered at the skating rink Monday night to witness the skating match advertised to take place between Albert Halvorson of Crookston and Alfred Bonvette of Hallock. After some music by the Hallock band the two skaters were called to the ice and in a few minutes the word "go" was given. For about twelve laps the race was quite interesting but after this Bouvette gained and was soon half a lap ahead which he held until the thirty laps were skated winning the race and half the gate receipts which was $15.

THE SNAKES AT THE ZOO.

An event has occurred at the zoo.
Very high among marvels we rank it.
There's a reptile residing there who Accidentally swallowed his blanket.

But that story has now become old,
And that feat surpassed by another.
There's a snake still alive, we are told,
Who by accident swallowed his brother.

One would think such an odd mental fit
Of abstraction—excuse the suggestion—
Would be followed up after a bit
By a fit of acute indigestion.

And, moreover, although one pretend
To be free from internal sensations,
Still a rupture is apt to attend
Such a straining of friendly relations.

But there's no such result we can find,
Though the former has swallowed the latter,
So we say it's a triumph of mind
Or absence of mind over matter

Should there still at the zoo be a snake
Who may wish that the record be beaten,
He must swallow himself by mistake
And pretend not to know what he's eaten

CLEVER AMERICAN MECHANICS.

Their Ingenuity In Woodwork Attracting Attention In Foreign Countries.

The mighty advance in wood working machinery in the United States has evoked surprise everywhere. In America the idea is to make everything of wood without hand labor, automatically where possible. This desire has been so successful that it is a rare exception a factory is found employing handwork. Every known description of woodwork, out of every kind of wood, is made entirely of machinery. Many of these machines are veritable wonders, performing their work with a readiness and accuracy that excite the most profound attention. Some of the English experts say of them that they are the best examples of ingenuity ever produced, but of a lighter construction than the English make. But one must bear in mind that American iron, when cast into form, is very much tougher and hence does not require so much of it to give their machines strength and solidity. This is hardly true of English iron, and in consequence their machines contain a great deal more weight in iron and consequently look more massive, but by experience it has been proved conclusively that the latest improved American machines are just as strong and just as capable in durability as those made by the English makers.

Progressive English manufacturers—and there are a few of them—are gradually waking up to the fact that if they want to hold their own in the commerce of the world they will be compelled, through necessity, to employ the later and more economical methods to produce their manufactures. To do this they will have to turn to the Americans, much as it may be against their inclinations. American furniture, made entirely with machinery, is now getting a foothold in England and attracts the admiration of English buyers not only for its beautiful designs and finish, but for the superb construction, and lastly it can be obtained at a moderate price. Other articles of wood for domestic vehicles, agricultural, building uses, etc., are fast creeping in to the disadvantage of the English manufacturer. Indeed wherein the American manufacturer succeeds it is only through the use of machinery, and therefore the Englishman, in order to protect himself from encroachment, must adopt the American idea by using American machinery, for is it not a fact that the Englishman is behind the times in getting "up to date" wood working machinery? If this statement is not correct, show us the fallacy of it. Machinery saves time and labor, consequently money.—Cincinnati Commercial Gazette.

Babies and Babies.

"I remember very well when Charlie, my oldest, was a baby he was simply angelic. I was sometimes tempted to pinch him, just to see if he could cry. He slept hour after hour and always woke with a smiling face and a cooing voice. And I, silly young thing that I was, plumed myself on what an excellent mother I was and felt a deep contempt for all mothers of crying babies. But I was doomed to have a fall. When Willis came, I don't think there was ever a more sensitive bunch of nerves existed. He cried, it seemed to me, continually and woke from his fitful slumbers on the lightest pretext, and I was ready to run to the guts when I saw visitors coming to apologize for what I had said in the past and to ask them please to walk softly. I then learned that there are babies and babies, and physical conditions have everything to do with a child's temperament."—Womankind.

Frenchmen With English Wives.

It is a curious fact that, notwithstanding the strong prejudice which the French entertain toward Britain and the British, the French gentlemen have a decided preference to British ladies when they mean to marry. An Englishman visiting Paris is surprised at the number of English ladies with French husbands whom he meets in society. If a British lady of passable appearance remains long unmarried in Paris, the presumption is that the fault is her own. It is worthy of remark, on the other hand, that a Briton resident in Paris very rarely marries a French lady.—French Letter.

Collector—See here, when are you going to do anything on this account?

Diversify Slowly.

year. but take it slowly and surely. If you are economical and succeed, you will have gained both experience and some means, to say nothing of the needful credit that success will give you. All the creameries that have made a failure over this broad northwest have done so because they started too large, invested too much money, and did not have the experience nor required conditions to make them pay. In wheat raising, our people did not profit by the experience of the last 50 years of the new countries settled and turned over to wheat raising, but went in headlong, running right into the breakers. Do not repent this in the creamery business. Look the matter over twice before you invest.

There is another thing which you might do. There are some advantages in creameries, there are also some in cheese factories. Two rooms 12x14 are large enough to make the milk, from the cows you claim you have, into cheese. The very best outfit costs only $300 and if I advised I would reduce this to $200. I would not buy a boiler. The market for cheese is, I think, better than that for butter. Cheese export price averaged during 1894 (fiscal year) 10 cents, butter a little less than 17 cents. The first investment will be a good deal smaller, and there will be no loss on it in this region, after this there will always be sale for a second-hand cheese outfit. So look around closely. We dare not, cannot afford in this region, to go in blindly, make a failure and give dairying and better conditions a set back.

You speak of an engineer, etc. Do not have enlarged ideas of what you need. You need neither a skilled engineer nor any other skilled help except the man who makes the butter or cheese. Start in with these exalted ideas and you are busted before you start. Figure on the smallest out outlay possible.

one, and has mainly gathered its force in minds of many farmers because of the fact that light one-half bushel per acre sowing has been carried on for years, allowing quite as much of a growth of weeds as flax. It is the experience of every successful fiber growing farmer in this country and every other, that with right methods of culture and systematic rotation of crop neither flax or hemp are as exhausting to the soil as wheat or barley. There is room for profitable investment for fifty fiber mills for the production of high grade long line fiber in North Dakota and as many more in Minnesota. No chance of overdoing this industry. The market is sure for all time to come. We don't need any more tow mills for upholstery, for this business is already overdone, the market being limited. I say to the farmers of the northwest grow flax and hemp, for fiber and the mill will come to you.

Baked Beans and Brown Bread.

In a number of New England towns the local baker bakes beans for half the town. Saturday nights the pots are taken to the bakeshop, where the baker marks each one with the initials of the owner and places them in his big oven. Next morning the owners call for their beans and pay the charge of 10 cents and invest 10 more in brown bread. It is an amusing sight on a Sunday morning to see a line of citizens going from the bakeshop to their homes, each with a bean pot on one arm and a loaf of brown bread on the other.

Good, old fashioned brown bread is the proper accompaniment for baked beans. Here is a famous recipe for Boston brown bread of the proper kind: One cup of rye or graham flour, a cup of white flour, 2 cups of Indian meal, a cup of molasses (scant), 2 teaspoonfuls soda, one-half teaspoonful salt, a cup of sour milk and 1¼ or 2¼ cups water. Steam for three hours and then dry in the oven for half an hour. The brown bread should be eaten warm, and what is left over can either be steamed again or toasted.—Exchange.

Ladies' Fancy Waists for Early Spring.

With the growing taste for fancy waists wholly independent of the skirt the problem of economical dressing becomes susceptible of an easy solution this season. The same skirt can be made to serve more than one purpose, and on the other hand, the bodice not being compelled to conform in style to the latter, may be put to several uses. This distinction between the two parts of the costume is greatly facilitated by the new materials. Thus, the highly artistic broche crepon of the latest importations is admirable suited to skirts both stylish in appearance and practical for every-day wear. The McDowell Fashion Magazines just received contain many designs of new models of bodices as well as skirts, which render them unusually attractive this month. A practical feature of these journals is their special coupon patterns which are purposely adapted the popular taste for novelties in combination. "La Mode de Paris" and Paris "Album of Fashion" are the leading Fashion Magazine. They cost $3.50 each for a year's subscription, or 35 cents per copy; "The French Dressmaker" is always the great favorite among professionals as well as amateur dressmakers. It costs $ 3.00 per annam, or 30 cts. a copy. "La Mode," a magazine of unsurpassed popularity is only $1,50 a year, or 15 cents a copy. If you are unable to procure either of these journals from your newsdealer do not take any substitute from him, but apply by mail directly to Messrs. McDowell & Co., 4 West 14th Street, New York.

Deafness Cannot be Cured.

by local applications as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh cure. Send for circulars, free. F. J. CHENEY & CO.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

From our Regular Correspondent.

WASHINGTON, FEB. 22, 1895.

No administration in the history of the country ever received a harder slap in the face from congress than that given the present one by the amendment added to the Sundry Civil appropriation bill by the senate appropriation committee, forbidding the private sale of bonds. Its adoption by congress will be equivalent to a vote of lack of confidence in the administration, which in England would result in the immediate change of ministry, and, unless there is a radical change of sentiment in congress, its adoption is only a question of time. Senator Mills, of Texas, who has upon occasion sang to cuckoo music, doesn't think that the amendment goes far enough, and has given notice of his intention to offer another one when the bill gets before the senate, providing for the outright repeal of that portion of the specie resumption act that authorizes the issue of bonds. Mr. Cleveland ought to thank his stars that the death of this congress is so near, and that so many of the regular appropriation bills remain unacted upon, that no time is left to carry out numerous threats made against him privately by individual senators and representatives.

Congressional financial marching up the hill and down agin, which has been such a marked feature of the present session, came to an end with the formal abandonment of the Jones bill for the unlimited coinage of silver by the senate, although there may be a few spasmodic attempts on the part of individuals to make their records on the question more satisfactory to their constituents, during the remaining days of the session.

Senator Pettigrew's answer to the question of whether he would recommend any person for appointment as postmaster at Sioux Falls, S. D., in place of the man whose nomination has been adversely acted upon by unanimous vote of the senate committee on post-offices and post-roads, is particularly significant, in view of the charge that Mr. Pettigrew voted with the administration Democrats on the Hawaiian question in exchange for federal patronage in his state, which has been made in certain newspapers. Mr. Pettigrew said: "I would not ask the president to appoint any one to any office. In fact, I should consider any friend of mine insulted who receives a commission signed by Mr. Cleveland. But if another nomination is made for postmaster at Sioux Falls, my own home, without consulting me, I shall try again to secure the rejection of the nomination."

There has been considerable snobbery about this administration from the beginning, but Secretary Morton this week outsnobbed all the rest. It was his turn to give a cabinet dinner to Mr. and Mrs. Cleveland, and likewise his turn to make an ass of himself. He had two expensive chairs, on for Mr. Clevelnad and one for his wife, made for the occasion, each having a silver plate inscribed with the name of the occupant and the date of the dinner set in its back. Shade of "Jerry" Rush. And this man is a member of the cabinet, a portion of whose duties is supposed to be giving the president of the United States advice. He has already been dabbed "Silver Plate Morton," and the name ought to stick to him the longest day he lives, and in addition, he should be compelled to wear at all times a silver breastplate inscribed "I am Cleveland's chief book-licker."

Secretary Carlisle took good pains while positively denying the present necessity for the proposed amendment to an appropriation bill, giving the secretary of the treasury authority to issue short-time 3 per cent loan certificates to meet any deficit in the revenues, to put in a bid for that very legislation, by saying in his official communication to the senate: "It is my opinion that the secretary of the treasury ought to be permanently invested with authority to issue and sell short-time bonds or other obligations of the government for the purpose of raising money to meet such deficiences in the ordinary revenues as may occur from time to time." Like the boy who having declared he was not hungry and declined the proffered cookies, he accompanies the declination with the suggestion that he be made the custodian of the cookies and be given permission to eat them if he should happen to get hungry.

There is a deadlock in conference over that Hawaiian cable amendment to the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill, the senate insisting that it shall stand and the house that it shall be struck out. Many senators still insist that the amendment shall stand or the bill fail.

Ole E. Rude was in on Tuesday with a bright gleam in his off eye as he remarked: "It is a 12-pounder, born yesterday the 25th; it is what the Indians would call a She-boy-gan and we shall give it a name appropriate to a nice little girl. It is a birthday present to it's mother."

Charlie Pitkin came over from Grand Forks last week and went out to his home at Euclid to spend Washington's Birthday with his parents. He returned on Tuesday morning to the Strawbridge Business College, of which institute he is a student.

The entering wedge of a fatal complaint is often a slight cold, which a dose or two of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral might have cured at the commencement. Therefore, it is advisable to have this prompt and sure remedy always at hand to meet an emergency.

Postmaster F. E. LePage gave a large party on Tuesday evening. A very pleasant time is reported.

The old Centenary church building at Minneapolis was entirely destroyed by fire on Monday. It was fitted up as a printing establishment some time ago and a number of papers were printed there, among them that popular paper the Housekeeper. The office of the Housekeeper was in the building also.

Adolph Bydal was in the city on Saturday last. Talking with a JOURNAL reporter he said that the Red River Dalen would be very much in evidence hereafter as he still retains the name and the list. It is said that Atty Gen. Standish, of North Dakota, is backing up the Dalen. Bydal has shown a great deal of pluck and if anybody can make the Dalen win he can.

W. O. Wilson has just received a letter from Andrew Sulsdal, who went from Polk county to Bella Coola with the Saugstad colony. Andrew says that he thinks that he shall like it out there after awhile. Says he has seen no colder weather than 14 degrees below. He wants to put in a summer there before he is prepared to express his opinion as to the country.

Speaking of cold weather W. L. Palmer informs our scribe that in January there were 27 days that the mercury registered below zero, from 1 to 27 degrees, and 19 in February, from 1 to 38. February 3d was the coldest day of the entire winter with the mercury at 38 degrees below. The 27th of January was the coldest day of that month, 27 below.

John C. Wells gave us a pleasant call on Tuesday on his way to Fertile where he will go to section 37 in Liberty, on which section he intends to have a cheese-factory established the coming summer. He intends to put considerable money into the farm buildings there to fit them up for that purpose. Says they can get all the cows needed in that neighborhood and expects the cheese man will do a big business from the start.

Ike Simmons: "I tell you that tannery is getting to be a big institution. Almost every freight train brings them hides from farmers at a distance and it is a cold day when I don't have to drive over there at least once a day. It is interesting to go over there and see the hundreds of hides they have—from the green hide just brought in to the fine finished product. Our city made an investment there that she need never regret, and I would like to see many other enterprises started that are equally beneficial."

A. C. Schmidt, the painter, is down at Fertile putting the finishing touches on Otto Kankel's new residence. Schmidt says Mr. Kankel has built a great house that must have cost a lot of money and will soon be in shape to enjoy life to the utmost. Mr. Kankel's financial success shows what there is in a grist-mill properly run. For years he has been in that business and so liberal has he been with his customers that he is patronized by farmers from all over the county. They come for miles to get their wheat ground by Kunkel. This shows what a grist-mill properly conducted would be to Crookston—drawing trade from a large tract of country. Crookston should have a grist-mill.

Frank T. Haseltine was up St. Hilaire way last week and says that he met many farmers who had seen his articles in the JOURNAL, and they were all eager to talk it over with him and get more light on the subject. There is no doubt but that our farmers are neglecting a very lucrative business when they fail to cultivate small fruits more. Here is one industry that cannot very well be overdone that seems to be almost totally neglected, but very many are becoming interested and no doubt a great change will be the result. One thing is very sure, our farmers will have to give up the idea of making a mint of money in wheat with wheat at present prices. They must try something else and that very soon.

Somebody attempted to perpetrate a joke on John Bergquist one day last week by taking the robe off John's horse that he had left standing in front of his place on Robert street for a few moments. As soon as the robe was removed the horse thought it was time to go to his stable and started off leisurely. Just as he turned the corner John came out and saw him and following him to the stable discovered the loss of the robe, and then—well, then there was blood on the moon and John began to study up detective methods, consult sheriffs, lawyers, doctors and all that sort of thing. Pretty soon the "takee" began to get uneasy and coughed up—and not a minute too soon for John had decided to go down and consult Bill Erwin and have him get after the robe embezzler and having him just as soon as he gets Hayward convicted and ready to hang. Just the same John feels a good bit relieved in mind for the robe is a very expensive one.

A Grist-Mill.

H. J. Taylor, a miller of Minneapolis, was up to look up the matter of the grist mill of which some talk been had. He was very favorably impressed with the prospects and if he meets with sufficient encouragement a custom flour mill will be among the early improvements.

Try Dairying.

We notice that where cheese factories and creameries abound the farmers are not worrying about what kind of a crop they better try next spring. The cow has solved that problem for them and they will keep right on making living profits. The all-wheat farmer is just now doing a good deal of worrying.

The Brownies.

The enterainments given by the little folks were not as liberally patronized as they deserved to be, for the amount of work put in and the really meritorius character of the work done. The little fellows, both lads and lassies did exceedingly well and we regret that it was not a great financial success.

Sold His Farm.

C. H. Saake has sold his Parnell farm—or rather traded it for horses, getting some cash besides, and goes below this week after his horses. Mr. Saake is an enthusiastic farmer but is of the opinion that farming interferes too much with his jewelry business so he sells his farm and will stick to his shop hereafter.

The Dairy Meeting.

Mr. E. D. Childs informs the JOURNAL that a dairy meeting will be held in Crookston on Friday and Saturday, March 15th and 16th. Some of the most noted dairymen of the state will be present, including Prof. Haecker and O. C. Griggs. This will be a good opportunity for farmers who desire it to get instruction on matters pertaining to butter and cheese making that will be of great importance to them. There should be a big turn out. Everybody come.

My Wife is Nervous

Says many a man and too often he is inclined to blame the poor, tired woman who cannot eat or sleep, whose whole life is filled with misery because her blood has become impoverished and her nervous system exhausted. She needs a building up medicine like Hood's Sarsaparilla. A few bottles will enrich and vitalize her blood, tone and strengthen her digestive organs, give her a good appetite, enable her to sleep soundly, banish her nervousness and bring back her smiles. Mr. J. W. Roberson, of Greenfield, Tenn., says: "My wife began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla about three months ago and she is now taking her third bottle. She has been in poor health for fifteen years. Hood's Sarsaparilla is doing her more good than any other medicine she has ever taken. Her appetite is better, she looks better and there has been improvement in every way."

"If The Problem of designing a sleeping car for the comfort of invalids obliged to travel were given to a society of physicians we do not believe the solution would require one convenience not offered in the private compartment sleeping cars on the Northwestern Limited between Minneapolis, S. Paul and Chicago. Art and skill can surely accomplish nothing further in the matter of making sleeping cars more comfortable.—The Lancet, St. Paul.

TAURUS IN A NEW ROLE.

Untoward Results of Substituting a Bull For a Horse In "Mazeppa."

Jim Larkin was a noted character of Cheyenne in the seventies. Larkin was one of those harmless officious fellows and had his nose into everything. There was never a dog fight but in some way he got bitten, never a fire but he got burned, and never an accident but he was there in time to get hurt. Larkin was something of a showman. During his residence in Cheyenne a colored tragedian filled an engagement in that city, playing "Hamlet" and "Othello."

Larkin saw in the colored man a great opportunity to make money and induced him to play "Mazeppa," using a wild bull instead of a wild horse. The tragedian fell into the idea, and rehearsals for the great event were had. The performance was given in a large hall, which was crowded to the doors.

The play went off lovely until it was time for the wild bull of Tartary to be brought on, and then there was a slight hitch. The bull had suddenly become reluctant about going on the stage. Manager Larkin got behind him and gave the animal's tail a twist. It had the desired effect. The bull rushed upon the stage and tore out every foot of scenery, and then jumped off into the orchestra, landing on top of the slide trombone player.

The audience stampeded and jumped through the windows and doors, and in a very few minutes the bull had everything to himself. The "Mazeppa" engagement closed that night.—Anaconda Standard.

Give Proper Food.

Liebig says, "The use of spirits is not the cause but an effect of poverty." The craving for stimulants in children as shown by the desire for tea and coffee often comes from the same source—that is, lack of a sufficient amount of the right kind of food. When a laborer earns by his work less than is required to provide the amount or kind of food which is indispensable in order to restore fully his working power, an unyielding, inexorable law of necessity compels him to have recourse to spirits. He must work, but in consequence of insufficient food a certain portion of his working power is daily wasting. Spirits by their action upon the nerves enable him to make up the deficient power at the expense of his body, to consume today that quantity which ought naturally to have been employed a day later.—Table Talk.

Growth of the Hair.

The influence of diet on the growth of hair has often been discussed. It has been shown that starchy mixtures, milk and many other foods recognized as being highly nutritious are, in fact, sure death to hair growth. Chemical analysis proves that the hair is composed of 5 per cent of sulphur, and its ash of 20 per cent of silicon and 10 per cent of iron and manganese. The foods which contain the larger per cent of the above named elements are meat, oatmeal and graham. Henry pointedly says, "Nations which eat most meat have the most hair."—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Satiated.

First Boy—Did yeh have plenty of nice things to eat at that party?

Second Boy—Did we? We had such loads of everything that w'en Mrs. Goodsoul gave me some iced cake to take to my mother I didn't even lick it going home.—Good News.

The REVIEW is the mouthpiece of the men and women who know most about the great topics on which Americans require and desire to be informed from month to month. Its list of contributors forms a roll of the representative men and women of the age.

Subjects that concern the interests of

receive constant and special attention. Among topics recently discussed are:

"Woman Suffrage in Practice"; "The Renaissance of Woman"; "Woman in Politics"; "The New Aspect of the Woman Question" and "The Modern Girl," by the author of "The Heavenly Twins"; "The Future of Marriage"; "Evils of Early Marriages"; "The Servant Girl of the Future"; "The Financial Dependence of Women"; "Trades-Unions for Women"; "The Lack of Good Servants"; "American Life and Physical Deterioration"; "Good and Bad Mothers"; "The Tyranny of the Kitchen"; "The Amateur Nurse"; Mark Twain's Defense of Harriet Shelley, etc., etc.

A New Feature for 1895.

The REVIEW will publish in 12 chapters, beginning with the January number, the

Personal History of the Second Empire,

a historical work of unsurpassed importance, which will throw a flood of light upon the chequered career of Napoleon III, and the influences which led to the collapse of his Empire in the gigantic struggle with united Germany, under Wilhelm I, and his Iron Chancellor. It is as fascinating as a romance, being richly anecdotal and full of information drawn from sources hitherto inaccessible, presented in the graphic and vivacious style which "The Englishman in Paris," by the same author, has made familiar to thousands of our readers.

GERMAN WHIST.

One of the Few Interesting Games of Cards For Two Hands.

There are, for some undiscovered reason, very few simple two handed card games. And of these the best, and perhaps the least known, is German whist. Essentially a game of skill, there is a sufficient element of luck combined to insure a good game even between two unequal players, and the issue is always more or less uncertain until the last moment.

An ordinary pack of whist cards is all that is required, and as far as play is concerned the rules of whist are almost entirely applicable. Thirteen cards are dealt to each player, as in the ordinary four handed game. Instead, however, of turning up the twenty-sixth card, the twenty-seventh card is placed face upward on the remainder of the pack. The suit of this card remains trumps throughout the game.

The dealer's vis-a-vis plays first by leading a card, and the dealer must follow suit as in whist, or, if he cannot, either trump or throw away a useless card.

The first trick is now on the table, and whoever picks it up draws the trump card from the top of the pack. The card below this is drawn by the loser, who does not show its face. The third card on the pack is now turned up and will belong to the winner of the second trick, the loser again drawing the card underneath, and so on throughout the pack. In this way the player has 13 cards in his hand until the end.

As tricks of two are difficult to keep distinct, it is generally found advisable to pile them indiscriminately for the time being and to count them out at the end of each game.

In playing the cards have the ordinary whist valuations, and when the last cards have been drawn the 13 which remain in the hand are played out in the usual way. The difference between the number of tricks taken by the dealer and his opponent is the number of points the winner scores. Each game is usually considered complete in itself, but it is no unusual occurrence to find at the end that each player has 13 tricks.

It is difficult in such a short space to give any reliable hints for players, but any one accustomed to whist will fall into the way at once. Obviously, however, it is not always an advantage to take the card which is turned up, and in the case of this being a low one a speculative player will often lead the lowest card in his hand in the hope of drawing something better underneath. The player is happy who, when it comes to playing the last 13 cards, finds himself with one long suit and the majority of trumps!—Home Notes.

Rubinstein.

Rubinstein, the famous pianist, went to confession one day in the Kasan cathedral in St. Petersburg. After the confession he stopped to the "sacristy book" to inscribe his name. The officiating priest asked him his name, rank and profession.

"Rubinstein, artist," came the answer.

"You are in service of some theater?"

"No."

"You give instruction in some institute?"

"No. I am a musician."

"Then you are employed somewhere?"

"I told you once no."

"Well, how, then, shall I describe you here?"

The two men looked at each other several moments. Then a "wise thought," in his own estimation, came to the priest.

"What is your father?" he asked, his eyes brightening.

"Merchant of the second class."

"Then," cried the priest, with joy, "at last we know who you are! We shall write, therefore, 'Son of a merchant of the second class.'"

This scene gave Rubinstein much food for thought. It led him to establish his conservatory and the musical society in order to teach the Russian people what the word musician might mean.—New York Tribune.

Exceptionally Honored.

A good old Methodist lady attending service in a suburban Episcopal church last Sunday became happy under the preaching of the word and ejaculated "Glory." She was admonished to keep quiet by two of the brethren and nodded assent, but soon becoming forgetful responded "Hallelujah." The brethren again called her attention to the annoyance and told her that if she did not keep quiet they would be compelled to remove her. The sermon proceeded, and the old lady, becoming very happy and forgetful of her surroundings, shouted out, "Glory to God." This was too much for the brethren and they tried to lead her out, but she refused to walk, so they carried her. On the way she said:

"I am honored above my Master, for while he was carried by an ass I am carried by two."—Philadelphia Record.

Always Keep to the Right.

The polite dodging that some times occurs between passers in a narrow passage was happily solved once by a tall, ungraceful, bulky Vermonter, who extricated both from the position by saying, "If you will stand still, madam, I will go home." Joseph Ritchie of Roxbury used to tell an experience of his in the days when ladies' gowns trailed on sidewalks and in street cars, and their tempers flashed out if anybody trod upon them. Looking straight at the flushed cheeks and wrinkled forehead, "I excuse you, ma'am," said Mr. Ritchie, with old school politeness.—Boston Transcript.

GAME WARDENS MADE A HAUL

Seven Arrests at Waterville for Illegal Fishing—Law Not Popular.

WATERVILLE, Minn., Feb. 25.—A game warden and a deputy sheriff swooped down upon the adjacent lakes and bagged seven men for illegal fishing. They also took 15 spears and cans of small fish which were being used for bait, no doubt, and about 100 pounds of pickerel. When the posse with the men had arrived at the hotel the warden said the trials would be at Kasata, some 30 or 40 miles distant. The town became wild with excitement and more than 300 men came together immediately and proceeded to inform the officers that the town possessed courts of justice, and that, as some of the prisoners were decrepit, others with sick in their families, two or three boys, and all poor people, it would be entirely proper to give the arrested a hearing at home. While this argument was in progress the spears and fish disappeared. The warden seeing that there might be trouble if he undertook to take the prisoners away, had them arraigned before Esquire Delon, where they pleaded not guilty and demanded separate trials and by jury, and time to prepare for trial. The court gave them till the 27th to appear, without bail. Some of the fishermen said they were fishing with hook and line and had their spears handy so as to help out such fish as were liable to break the lines.

THE WORK OF CONGRESS

Tuesday, Feb. 19.

The house spent the day in the further consideration of the naval appropriation bill. The committee on naval affairs were victorious at every test of strength. The conference report on the bill to extend the time for making returns under the income tax law were agreed to.

The senate spent all day and until 9 o'clock in the evening in debate on the Jones silver bill. It became apparent that no vote could be secured, and the senate adjourned. This virtually kills the bill for this session.

Wednesday, Feb. 20.

The naval appropriation bill passed the house with provision for three new battleships and twelve torpedo boats.

The senate considered the Indian appropriation bill, the Jones silver bill having been sidetracked. In the course of a speech Senator Chandler announced that the next congress will investigate the administration gold bond deal, annex Hawaii and build the Nicaragua canal.

Thursday, Feb. 21.

A sectarian debate of an acrimonious nature was precipitated in the senate during the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill. The consideration of the bill was not completed.

The house devoted most of the day to the consideration of the senate amendment to the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill, appropriating $500,000 for the construction of a cable to the Hawaiian islands. The amendment was defeated.

Friday, Feb. 22.

In the senate the contract school item of the Indian bill was completed in such form as to provide a 20 per cent reduction from the expenditures of last year.

Senator Pettigrew announced that a private agreement had been reached whereby the pooling bill would be taken up and kept before the senate until a vote was reached.

The house devoted the day to the further consideration of the general deficiency appropriation bill.

Saturday, Feb. 23.

The Indian appropriation bill was passed by the senate after having been under consideration five days, and beginning was made on the sundry civil bill. A motion to take up the pooling bill was defeated by a decisive vote.

The house continued consideration of the general deficiency bill.

Monday, Feb. 25.

The general deficiency bill—the last of the regular appropriation bills—has passed the house. Almost the entire day was spent discussing the amendment to pay Great Britain $425,000, the amount of damages agreed upon by Secretary Gresham and Sir Julian Pauncefote to be due that country under award of the Paris arbitration tribunal on account of the seizure of some 20 Canadian sealers by the United States previous to the modus vivendi of 1892.

The senate, considering the sundry civil bill, adopted the item of $150,000 for the purchase of the Blaine mansion.

PENNSYLVANIA ELECTIONS.

Patterson Snowed Under by a Plurality by a Plurality of Over 60,000.

PHILADELPHIA, Feb. 23.—It was after 4 a. m. when the count of the vote cast in this city was completed. Not only were there more ballots put in the boxes than ever before, but the ticket in every ward was cut to such an extent as to make the work of tabulating the vote very difficult.

In a total vote of 214,717, Charles F. Warwick, Republican candidate for mayor, had a plurality of 60,989 over ex-Governor Robert E. Pattison, the Democratic standard bearer. This is the greatest plurality ever given a candidate in a municipal contest, the previous record being 39,065, received by Edwin S. Stuart in 1891.

Howgate Acquitted.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 25.—The jury in the case of Captain Howgate, charged with embezzlement returned a verdict of acquittal.

Did Not Blame the Japanese.

A pretty and talkative little girl, evidently her mother's pet, was riding in a Sixth avenue "L" train the other afternoon. Her mother accompanied her. The child often set the passengers laughing at her droll and ingenuous remarks. Presently a remarkably fat Chinaman, in full Chinese costume, entered and sat opposite the child.

She looked at him in apparent amazement, and then turning to her mother, with an air that showed she had "given it up," asked:

"Mamma, what's that opposite?"

"Sh! That's a Chinaman, my dear," answered the mother in a low tone.

"The same kind of Chinaman papa says the Japanese are killing?"

"Yes, my dear. Don't talk so loud."

The child meditated a moment and then said:

"Well, I don't blame 'em."—New York Herald.

SIX WERE CREMATED

BURNING OF A NUMBER OF HOT SPRINGS BOARDING HOUSES

Results in Serious Loss of Life, and Several Hundred Thousand Dollars Worth of Property—Four Squares Burned—Very Little Insurance on the Property.

HOT SPRINGS, Ark., Feb. 24.—As far as known six people were burned to death and four and a half blocks of the residence and business portion of the city were destroyed by the fire that originated in the Ledgerwood bakery. The residence of H. M. Hundgkins and the bakery were destroyed and in 10 minutes the fire had spread to half a dozen buildings, and, fanned by a strong wind from the north, swept everything as tinder before it. The flames crossed the street and the Ouachita hotel and Oaklawn were next burned. Out of nearly 100 houses burned, in only half a dozen cases was the furniture saved. Among the dead are Mrs. Mary Sammouson, 70 years old; D. W. Wing of Glens Falls, N. Y.; a man named Hall, a negro, name unknown, and Mrs. Maggie Hiscock, housekeeper at the Oaklawn.

The Total Loss of the conflagration will reach hundreds of thousands of dollars. The fire originated in a bakery on Ouachita avenue, over which were furnished rooms. Here Mrs. Sammouson, who kept the rooms, was burned. The other buildings burned were:

The Laclede, loss $6,000; the Ouachita, loss $5,000; the Illinois, $4,000; the Missouri $3,000; the Oak Lawn, $5,000; the Bloomington, $6,000; H. M. Hudgin's residence, $12,500; R. L. Williams, 3-story brick, $12,000; Joplin's grocery, $8,000; E. Randolph's residence, $6,000; Ledgerwood's bakery, the Tennessee stables; the West House and 15 cottages of a total value of $15,000.

There is very little insurance, the loss being practically total. The fire was at the south end of the gulch in which Hot Springs is located, and the wind was from the north. As a result none of the large hotels were at any time in direct danger. The fire burned both sides of Ouachita avenue to Hawthorne, one side of Hawthorne to Woodbine and both sides of Orange to Quapaw street.

MENAGE HEARD FROM.

President of the Guaranty Loan Would Like to Return to Minneapolis.

MINNEAPOLIS, Feb. 23.—Louis F. Menage, president of the Northwestern Guaranty Loan company, has been heard from. He has written a long letter to a personal friend in Minneapolis in defense of himself, and the letter has been given for publication. The principal point of interest about this letter is the tentative proposition Menage makes looking towards his return to Minneapolis, the clearing up of the tangled affairs of the Guaranty Loan company and its auxiliary companies and the claims against himself personally, and the postponement of the trial of charges of larceny and mismanagement until such time as the work of regenerating the company could be concluded.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 23.—Frederick Douglass, the noted freedman, orator and diplomat, died a few minutes before 7 o'clock at his residence in Anacostia, a suburb of this city, of heart failure. His death was entirely unexpected, as he had been enjoying the best of health.

FOR WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

Montana House Passes the Bill for a Constitutional Amendment.

HELENA, Mon., Feb. 23.—The woman's suffrage bill passed the house by 42 yeas to 12 nays. It was exactly the number required for the passage of a constitutional amendment, two-thirds of the 61 members elected to the house. The house also passed the bill to punish the entry of horses in races under false names or out of class; also a bill to put primary elections under control of the law.

LADIES MUST WAIT.

Those of South Dakota Cannot Vote for a While Yet.

PIERRE, S. D., Feb. 23.—Woman suffrage has met its Waterloo. When the bill came up at 4 o'clock a vote was taken without debate, and stood 40 ayes and 34 nays, and was declared lost. McKinnon moved to reconsider and lay upon the table, and the vote upon that was 38 to 36. This kills the measure.

Ransom Named.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 25.—The president nominated Matt W. Ransom of North Carolina to be envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States to Mexico. The senate immediately went into executive session and confirmed the nomination.

STATE LEGISLATURE

TWENTY-NINTH BIENNIAL SESSION

Tuesday, Feb. 19.

SENATE.—At the opening of the morning session of the senate an invitation to visit the state agricultural school in the afternoon was accepted and a night session decided on.

President Day announced as the committee of 15 to inspect the report of the capitol experts, Senators Stevens, Reishus Morgan, Yale, Wyman, Greer, Iltis, McHale, Peterson, Seballer, Masterman, Spencer, Cronkhite, Young and Thorpe.

House File No. 148 was passed under suspension of the rules. It relates to the sale of liquors in the vicinity of the state fair grounds.

Among the bills passed was one proposing an amendment to the constitution to authorize the taxation of the property of sleeping, drawing room and parlor car companies.

HOUSE—No afternoon session was held, but one was called in the evening. It was devoid of interest. Four bills were passed, principally amendments to existing statutes.

Wednesday, Feb. 20.

SENATE.—Many senators were away on committee junkets, so there was barely a quorum.

The bill abolishing days of grace was killed in committee of the whole. The bill amending factory laws was recommended to pass. The senate adjourned for the day at 11:30.

HOUSE.—Senate File 61, limiting punishment for grand larceny to 10 years imprisonment created a lively discussion, when an attempt was made to pass it under suspension. It was lost. On assembling after the recess the house resolved itself into committee of the whole and went to work on general orders. A fight was at once begun to amend or kill H. F. 311, substitute for H. F. 53, relating to chattel mortgages. A number of amendments were offered and discussed, and the bill was finally recommended for indefinite postponement.

Thursday, Feb. 21.

SENATE—In committee of the whole S. F. 281, Senator Cronkite's measure providing that native stone should be used on public buildings, caused considerable discussion, during which the regents of the university came in for a little criticism. The senators evidently thought the bill a good one, as it was finally unanimously recommended for passage. S. F. 203, to provide for the punishment of persons injuring or destroying dams, met no opposition and was recommended to pass.

Eight bills were passed and a large number of committee reports received. Adjourned till Saturday.

HOUSE—Speaker Van Sant named the house committee of 15 which is to act with the senate committee in the visit to the new capitol commission. The committee, by congressional districts, is made up as follows: Feig and McGrath, Seventh district; Downs and Zier, Fifth; Burtu, Parker and Gerlach, Fourth; Swanson, Jones, J. N., and Jones, J. D., Sixth; Scofield and Dump, Third; Jacobson, Second, and Littleton and Post, First.

The Littleton baking powder bill was defeated, as were also Sampson's local option bill and the resolution to so amend the constitution as to allow the building of a state elevator at Duluth. A bill to appropriate $100,000 for Red river drainage canals was recommended to pass without a word of protest. Adjourned to Monday.

Saturday, Feb. 23.

SENATE—During the morning session several bills of general interest were introduced. Three of them related to the reduction of salaries of city and county officials. Senator Culkin introduced a bill to cut railroad rates for 60-mile or less hauls 25 per cent. The rapid progress of the mining country in the Lake of the Woods region was touched upon in a petition presented by Senator Cronkhite.

The senate judiciary committee reported three salary bills for county and city officials in cities having over 100,000 population. The bills were ordered printed and referred to the delegations from Hennepin and Ramsey counties. The common council of such cities are given authority to regulate salaries, but not to allow any larger salaries than are paid at present. They may reduce all salaries except those of mayor and controller for the terms for which they are elected.

Only one bill upon the calendar caused any debate. It was Senator McHale's bill to appropriate $200 for the relief of Peter Barbeau for extra services rendered as a blacksmith during the Indian war of 1862-3. Senator McHale explained the bill. Barbeau worked days and nights shoeing horses and fixing wagons for a period of three months, and as he was in the army he could make no claim except the claim of a soldier for extra duty pay. The bill finally passed with only a few dissenting votes.

HOUSE.—Not in session.

Monday, Feb. 25.

SENATE.—Senator Stevens presided over the sitting of the senate in the absence of Lieutenant Governor Day. There were 14 new bills introduced and referred to appropriate committees. The following bills were passed:

S. F. 281—A bill for an act to provide for the use of native stone in the construction of public buildings for which funds shall be appropriated by the state of Minnesota.

S. F. 374—A bill for an act to amend sec. 10, chap. 11, general statutes of 1878, as amended by sec. 1, chap 126, general laws of 1893, as amended by chap. 2, general laws of 1895.

S. F. 203—A bill for an act to provide for the punishment of persons injuring or destroying dams, booms and similar structures.

The report of the committee on capitol plans was handed in. It recommends allowing the capitol commission ampler powers in selecting a design.

HOUSE—An even half dozen bills were passed. Three of these were bills by Senator Wyman and one by Senator Greer, the latter providing a $5,000 appropriation for the improvement of the national guard camping ground at Lake City. One of Senator Wyman's bills was to authorize boards of trustees for Young Men's Christian associations, and another to provide for the payment of wolf bounties. When the house reached Zier's bill to amend the banking laws, it was found that there were not two-thirds of the members present and an adjournment was taken.

Eleven bills were considered in committee of the whole.

Heavy Iowa Failure.

CRESTON, Ia., Feb. 27.—Oldham & Son, well known hardware dealers in Greenfield, Adair county, have failed. The firm has always been considered one of the solid institutions of the kind in the county and the failure is a great surprise. Liabilities $60,000.

narrative was resumed at the point where he returned to the Ozark after the theater and first heard the news that there had been an accident. He had difficulty in persuading Goosman, who was telephoning about it to police headquarters, who was killed. He thought it was Miss Ging or Miss Ireland, and when finally he learned that it was Miss Ging he became very much excited.

"I thought of all our relations," he said, "and how I had lent her money. I remembered that she had often asked me to lend her my revolver and, as I thought the matter over, I became convinced that she had been murdered. I don't know what I said to the people there or at the police station. I'd rather you'd take their story for that, as it is probably true. But I was very much excited. I told the officers that she had on a blue dress skirt and not a black one, because I knew it must be so. There are about 60 days in October and November. During those 60 days I had probably seen her 90 times, and I am sure that out of the 90 times there were 87 when she had on a shirt waist and a blue skirt. That was why I spoke as I did."

This testimony is a fair sample of the prolix explanations to which the defendant seems prone. Mr. Erwin then asked him to describe his experience in the "sweat box," and despite Mr. Nye's objections, he was allowed to do so.

Hayward described how he was taken to the morgue and shown the dead body with everybody watching him. He did not know what he did, but said he felt very bad and knew every one there thought him guilty. He went to Miss Ireland and offered to do anything about the funeral he could. He ordered some roses from a florist, and attended the funeral. On Thursday he and Adry were arrested and put in a cell together. Adry seemed very down in the mouth and Harry had said to him:

The Holdup Brought In.

"We're not guilty. What's the use of feeling this way?"

But Adry was dispirited and finally Harry had said:

"Adry, what is this? You held her up once. Did you have anything to do with this?"

Adry was silent and refused to talk any more. After that there was no further conversation between them.

Mr. Erwin next read the incriminating evidence of Blixt to the defendant-witness, and drew from him explicit denials of the charges made by Blixt. The testimony was gone into in detail first, each question asked by Mr. Erwin receiving an emphatic denial or an explanation. In summing up the attorney asked the general question:

"Did you have any conversation with Blixt about killing Miss Ging or any one else?"

"I did not," was the reply.

"Are they false or true?"

"They are all false."

"Did you ever have any intention of killing Miss Ging?"

"I never did. She was my true friend."

Regarding Adry's Testimony.

Erwin then branched on to the second part of his evidence, that of Adry's testimony, and called his attention first to Adry's statement that they had always been on first-class terms generally.

"It is not true at all," said Harry.

Harry declared that he and Adry were not on as intimate terms as brothers would naturally be, seldom going out together.

"What was the trouble?"

"My brother Adry is a victim of that green-eyed monster jealousy," he began. "His jealousy of me amounts to a mania—why, if my father wanted to lend me $50 he dare not do it while Adry was in the room for fear of the scene that would ensue. I've seen Adry curse and swear at him and blackguard him dozens of times. He often said he would kill him."

"Did you rebuke him?"

"Yes, I have," replied the witness.

At this point the court interfered, saying that it was not right to testify to scenes at which he was not present.

The Holdup Testimony Allowed.

At the afternoon session, after the introductory ceremony, the court stated that so much had cropped out about the whole holdup episode that although it was improper, he would let it all go in on both sides.

Harry was then asked to tell about the highway robbery and did so.

"I went out riding with the young ladies. They proposed it. We went out Kenwood and crossed over toward the Lake of the Isles. We were held up on that road and my watch and money were taken. The young ladies' rings were all hid except one Miss Veddar had."

"Well, when did you see the watch next?"

"It was up in the office. I came up while Adry was stooping over the safe. I stood there a minute before he saw me. He tried to bluff me off, but I locked the doors and shut the transom and then I went for him. Finally he admitted to me that he did it, but he wouldn't tell who was with him, as they would kill him. I asked him if he couldn't get along without that, and he replied that he had a mania for doing such things and burning buildings. He even said he could kill my father without his conscience hurting him."

That Family Row.

Harry was then asked about the Sunday, Oct. 7, episode, when the family row occurred. His testimony corroborated that already given by his father and mother. Then Erwin asked if he had the talk with Adry about making money and killing a woman for $2,000. He replied that he had not, but had told Adry that he (Harry) had found a man who was lots tougher than Adry but who had a conscience.

Adry's testimony about Harry telling him it was about time to sacrifice the dressmaker, on the Friday after Thanksgiving, and the whole scene following was denied. Harry did not remember having had any further talk with Adry that day. This denial cut out Adry's testimony that he had told Harry he would be haunted; that Harry had told him he had killed three people; that Harry had offered him $100 to kill a cripple. In the same manner Harry denied having cautioned Adry to go somewhere Saturday evening, as something was likely to happen.

Turned Over to Nye.

Just before court adjourned in the afternoon Mr. Erwin caused surprise by turning Hayward over for cross-examination. Owing to the near approach of adjournment the county attorney contented himself with going over some minor matters, but will begin in earnest in the morning.

ABSOLUTELY PURE

PICTURESQUE ECONOMY.

A Style of Laundry Work Said to Prevail In Boarding Houses.

A peculiar appearance in the front windows of an aristocratic boarding house on one of the leading avenues caused a discussion among passersby. In each pane was a square of white muslin, with embroidered edges, which was apparently glued to the pane.

"That's a queer way of keeping out the light," observed one citizen to another.

"Must be some new method of decoration," remarked another.

"Don't you know what that is?" said a young woman to her husband. "That's a window laundry."

"And what may that be?"

"It's the way ladies who board wash their fine handkerchiefs. You see, it dries and irons them at the same time."

"I see," answered the young man "that they adhere like postage stamps. How do they do it?"

"Oh, you first catch your window, then you wash the panes and place the handkerchief against them, wringing wet. They stick like a plaster, and when they come off are as smooth as satin. In that way every woman can be her own laundress."

"I see," said her husband thoughtfully, "why so many families board."—Detroit Free Press.

Eggs.

When choosing eggs, apply the tongue to the larger end of the egg, and if it feels warm it may be relied on as being fresh. Another mode of ascertaining the freshness of an egg is to hold it to the light, and if the egg looks clear it will be good; if thick, it is stale, and if there is a black spot attached to the shell it is worthless.

MUSIC HATERS.

Some There Are With an Aversion to Harmony's Sweet Strains.

No greater mistake can be made than to imagine that all royal personages are necessarily musical. True, there is a large number of melomaniacs among them, one of the most conspicuous instances having been the late King Louis of Bavaria. But, on the other hand, there are not a few who are entirely devoid of any ear for music and who even dislike it.

Thus Emperor Napoleon III was exceedingly averse to melody of every kind and character, while his uncle, the first emperor, complained that the sound of music used to jar on his nerves and to give him a headache.

King Humbert of Italy is equally devoid of ear, simply loathes the sound of instrumental music, and has so little notion of what is a false and what is a true note that the most efficacious threat that he can use when he wishes to induce his wife to stop playing on the piano is the declaration that he will commence to sing.

The great Empress Catherine of Russia used to say that, no matter how she wished to appreciate music, the finest harmony and the most celestial melodies sounded to her ear as a buzzing noise.

I have more than once discussed with eminent aurists in Germany the causes of this absence of what is known as the ear for music. They attribute it to one of two causes—either to a cerebral deficiency or to a defect in the drum of the ear. Strangely enough, one drum will sometimes be thus affected and the other not, and they cited the well known case of a famous scientist to whom the sound of music was a source of neurotic trouble and even downright agony until one day he happened to stop up one ear with cotton wool, when for the first time music became to him a source of pleasure and even delight.

A king who objects to music is King George of Greece, whose pet aversion is the national hymn of the country over which he reigns. No matter where the unfortunate man goes, either at home or abroad, he is compelled to listen to the strains of this melody, which is invariably struck up in his honor, and I have been frequently amused by observing the look of positive anguish upon his face when the band began its work.—Chicago Record.

WOULD IMPEACH.

Articles of Impeachment Against Judge F. Ives Filed in the House.

At Last Accounts the Judge Was Still Alive and Quite Hearty, Thank You.

On Thursday last, during the morning session in the House, Hon. Henry Feig rose in his place and offered a resolution embodying charges and specifications in impeachment against Judge Frank Ives of the 14th judicial district. The whole business was referred to the judiciary committee, with power to summon witnesses and investigate the charges. This business has proved to be a veritable tempest in a tea-pot, causing more excitement than a red-hot political campaign does. Meanwhile the judge takes it all calmly, says little, but is evidently sawing some good, hard wood. Politically the JOURNAL is not on the Judge's side of the fence, but for all that we believe in the principle of giving honor to whom honor is due, regardless of political considerations and it does look as though the boys, in their zeal, had bitten off more than they can masticate, as the burden of proof all falls on them.

IVES IMPEACHMENT CASE.

Of the Ives impeachment case now before the house judiciary committee the St. Paul Dispatch says:

"Minnesota seems to have its share of the impeachment of its district judges. Some years ago Judge Page was brought to trial before the senate by the house in impeachment proceedings and acquitted. Soon after Judge Cox was made respondent in impeachment proceedings, the charges being chiefly gross intoxication, and convicted and removed from office. At the present session of the legislature a petition has been presented to the house, asking an investigation in view of impeaching Judge Ives, of the Fourteenth Judicial district, for misconduct in office. The matter has been referred to the judiciary committee for full investigation to ascertain whether there is a prima facie case against him, and whether articles of impeachment shall be presented to the senate to place him on trial. The friends of Judge Ives are here to resist an impeachment, and argue that the movement has its origin in malice and is without foundation. The judiciary committee of the house is composed of able and cautious lawyers, who will not rush hastily into impeachment proceedings, incurring heavy extra expenses to the state, unless the evidence of malfeasance is of a very convincing character, It is becoming a serious question whether the old method of trying impeachments should be retained, with their great expense and delay, such as result where the whole senate is called upon to conduct the final investigation. Nebraska has amended its constitution so as to provide that the house shall present the articles of impeachment as before but the supreme court is made the tribunal in which the trial takes place, except where one of the judges of that court himself has been impeached by the house. Good results have already appeared from this change in convenience and material reduction of expense."

THE EVIDENCE ALL IN

Jury in the Hayward Case Listening to Arguments of Attorneys.

NYE LEADS FOR THE STATE.

Last Day's Testimony Cause of Several Sensational Scenes.

MINNEAPOLIS, March 5.—The duration of the Hayward trial, which has entered on its seventh week, is now a matter of hours, yet in the short time that must elapse before the jurors retire to perform their solemn duty, a whole history must be told—the history of a crime almost without parallel in the criminal annals of this country. The day will be consumed by County Attorney Nye in summing up the case for the state. Mr. Nye has been ill for several days, but believes himself strong enough for the heavy task imposed upon him as public prosecutor. Mr. Erwin will follow and Judge Smith will charge the jury about Thursday.

Sensational Scenes.

The last day of taking testimony was a sensational one. Just after adjournment there was a sensational meeting between Harry and his brother Adry. Harry was violently angry at Adry and swore at him, saying, "You ——, I may hang, but before I quit I will send you to Stillwater. I know enough about you to give you 24 years there, and I'll do it too before I quit. I am on earth yet."

"Here," he added, turning to Erwin, "I want to swear out a warrant for this man."

"No you don't," said Erwin, striving to quiet his client.

"I don't wish you any harm," said Adry. "I'd rather see you go out of this court a free man," and the brother went away with his deputy. Harry then declared to the reporters that he knew of numerous fires Adry had set and thereby secured the insurance. He said he would prove what he said and send Adry to the penitentiary before he was hanged.

Last Witness a Surprise.

Albert Hall, the assistant prosecutor, managed his calcium lights perfectly during the introduction of evidence in rebuttal, and the effects were theatrically startling.

The story told by the final witness was positive and convincing. It was a surprise not alone to the defense, but to everyone who has followed the history of this case through the evidence.

George W. Jenks, the broker, was the prosecution's last witness, and it is his testimony which carries a weight which the defense will find most difficult to counteract. The fact that Mr. Jenks had seen a man running after the car he was on the night of the murder is already familiar to newspaper readers. The stoppage of the car and the instant slackening of speed by the pursuing runner has already been touched upon, but the state's attorneys have religiously guarded the fact that Mr. Jenks could identify the man.

It Was Startling.

When Mr. Jenks went on the stand it was expected he would state simply his impression as to the height and appearance of the person seen that night. Instead, he positively identified Harry Hayward as running after the car. The effect was electrical.

Whatever stir there had been in the room during the preliminary questions asked this witness became instantly hushed. Even the judge looked startled out of his usual equanimity. The perfectly masked features of the tall attorney for the defense for once betrayed what he felt. There was no sound for a moment after the witness had pointed his accusing finger at Hayward.

Harry Gets Excited.

"He's a liar," came sharply from the lips of the accused, and every eye in the room was turned on him. "A liar out of whole cloth," he added.

Hayward's face was a sight to see. A flood of ruddy color came from under his immaculate neck band and rushed to his temples. His face was aflame with emotions of one sort or another. The defense claims it was indignation, natural enough on hearing false testimony. The prosecution believes that Hayward feels the rope about his neck. Erwin tried to break the statement of the witness, but was unable to do so. He might possibly be mistaken, but it was not likely.

PROPS KNOCKED OUT.

Defense Received Rough Usage in Rebuttal Testimony.

MINNEAPOLIS, March 2.—The feeble defensive wall which Attorney Erwin has reared about his client to save him from those who are hunting him to the gallows was all but demolished by the testimony offered in rebuttal by the state. All the conjectures and innuendoes that have been thrown out by the defendant's attorneys have been born of the moment and stand for nothing but vain attempts to obscure the light.

Albert Hall, the assistant county attorney, figured as demonstrator to the class. The surgeons were called by the state to testify on the possibility, or otherwise, of Miss Ging's injuries, aside from the bullet wound, having been made by falling from the buggy. Dr. Dunsmuir was a ready witness and answered the long hypothetical question by stating that the fractures of the skull might have been caused by the fall.

Staggered Erwin.

Mr. Erwin, in cross examination, fell back on Ehrhardt's statement about the heel marks in the road, and asked the witness whether, in his opinion, the fractures could have occurred had the woman struck feet first and then fallen forward on her face.

The attorney for the defense confidently expected a reversal of opinion on this basis, but he was disappointed, for Dunsmoor promptly asserted that such injuries might easily have resulted, even under such circumstances as Mr. Erwin assumed to have existed.

Erwin was rather taken back at this declaration, and he gazed at the witness in that peculiar questioning way of his for some moments.

"That is your opinion?" he inquired.

"It certainly is," said Dr. Dunsmoor, emphatically.

The Bullet Could Have Done It.

In reply to a question of Mr. Hall the doctor said that the fractures could have resulted from a bullet wound alone by expansion, even though there was no apparent connection between them and the bullet wound.

Dr. Dunn gave testimony that was in every way corroborative of that given by his predecessor, and the state had succeeded in giving a hard knock to the theory that Blixt battered his victim with the steel rail.

Ernest Gamash, almost disabled by a recent accident, was helped to the stand and testified that at 7 o'clock on the evening of Dec. 3 he and his brother chased George Grindall under the stone arch bridge on Central avenue. Grindall had testified to being in the vicinity of the West hotel at that time and seeing the "third man."

The Holdup Again.

Mrs. Adry Hayward was called and asked regarding the whereabouts of her husband on the night of April 27, when Harry claims his brother held him up. Mrs. Hayward testified that on that night she and her husband were riding, going out after 9 o'clock, about the hour Harry claims the holdup occurred. She was positive as to the date, as she had read in the papers of the holdup and remarked to her husband that "We were riding; we might have been held up ourselves."

Adry Hayward was then called. He testified that he and his wife were riding the night of April 27. He got the rig about 9 o'clock and they drove about an hour and a quarter, leaving Mrs. Hayward at his home at Thirty-second and Calhoun. Neither he nor his wife left the buggy on the trip. He said there was not a word of truth in the conversation Harry testified to.

Harry a Rapid Eater.

Mrs. Mery E. Mathes, a sister of Mrs. Adry Hayward and a boarder at 6 Thirteenth street, where Harry ate the night of the murder, said that he came within a few minutes after 7, ate only a little soup, rejected the dinner course, and, she thought, only looked at the dessert. Then he left in a great hurry. She and her husband remained a few minutes longer and then went to their rooms, arriving there at 7:30. She recalled the time because she was going to her father's to celebrate his birthday. Harry had testified that it was 7:22 when he left the diningroom and that Mr. and Mrs. Mathes were both there.

James Ford, the old man who keeps the cigar stand at the corner of First avenue north and Fifth street, was called. He was so infirm that he had to be supported to the witness chair by three men. He testified that on the night of Dec. 3 he went into the street to pick up a stick of wood that had fallen from a passing load. As he stooped Miss Ging almost ran over him, and checked her horse within two feet of him. The old man knew the lady by sight. The horse, after being started, broke into a slight gallop. Ford watched it until it disappeared on Western avenue. No amount of cross-examination could shake his testimony. C. B. Dickens, proprietor of the West hotel livery stable, corroborated Ford's testimony.

RESTED FOR A DAY.

Neither Juror Dyer Nor Attorney Nye Were Well Enough to Proceed.

MINNEAPOLIS, March 4.—County Attorney Frank Nye was ready to begin his presentation of the Hayward murder case to the jury but Judge Smith was not ready to have him. The judge declared that he was not willing to jeopardize the life or health of either Mr. Nye or Juror Dyer, and he believed it better to give both another day's rest. Accordingly the case was continued a day.

It turns out that the Mapleton letter purporting to come from one Ike Wheeler, who claimed to have seen the murder committed and the accomplice leaving Blixt in the buggy, was a hoax, and it is likely there will be no more evidence submitted.

Erwin Expresses Confidence.

The attorneys for Hayward express a confidence in their case that finds but little support in public opinion. Mr. Erwin indignantly denies that the defense offered has been weak. He asserts that the only course incumbent on him as the attorney for Hayward was to discredit the ingeniously devised and

VETERANS IN COUNCIL

GRAND ARMY ENCAMPMENT HELD AT ST. PAUL.

Judge Torrance Elected Commander and J. J. McCardy Senior Vice—Reports of Outgoing Officers—Career of the New Commander.

ST. PAUL, Feb. 28.—The 15th annual encampment of the state department of the G. A. R. opened at Ford's hall.

It was after 11 o'clock before the gathering settled itself, and then Captain I. L. Mahan advanced without ceremony and with three sharp raps of the gavel brought the vets to their feet while the department chaplain, H. G. Bilbie of Owatonna, delivered the invocation. This done, Captain Mahan introduced Mayor Smith, who welcomed the delegates to the city.

Commander Van Sant's report shows that at the close of the previous administration there were 8,087 members in good standing. In spite of a loss of 138 by death, there has been but a small aggregate loss of membership.

He paid tributes to the Women's Relief Corps and to the Sons of Veterans. The finances of the order were in excellent shape.

At the afternoon session Department Surgeon Tucker and department Inspector White made their reports. The latter recommended that legislation be secured to purchase a flag for every schoolhouse in the state.

Resolutions were also passed favoring military drill in schools and declaring that no foreign flag should be allowed to float over any public building.

St. Paul was recommended as the place for holding the national encampment in 1896.

The state convention of Womans Relief Corps met in the First Baptist church and some 300 delegates from all parts of the state were present. Mrs. Ladusky Taylor, state president, called the meeting to order.

TORRANCE ELECTED.

The Minneapolis Judge Made Commander of the Minnesota G. A. R.

ST. PAUL, March 2.—The state encampment of vets opened early and considerable business was hustled through, because of the election of officers having been made a special order for 10:30, and the anticipated arrival of the commander-in-chief.

As was expected, the election resulted in the choice of Eli Torrance of Minneapolis for commander, and J. J. McCardy for senior vice. This places Mr. McCardy in line for the chief position when St. Paul entertains the grand encampment in 1896.

The encampment then passed to the choice of a junior vice commander, but in the midst of the nominations the commander-in-chief and staff arrived and were given the right of way.

After a brief speech from General Lawler the election of officers was resumed with the following result:

Junior vice commander, F. B. Wood, Long Prairie; chaplain, H. G. Bilbie, Owatonna, re-elected; medical director, Dr. J. H. Tucker, re-elected.

Record of Judge Torrance.

Judge Torrance was enrolled June 26, 1861, as a private in company A, Ninth Pennsylvania Reserves. Served three years. Was in the battle of Drainsville, the first victory won by the Army of the Potomac. In the seven days' fighting under McClellan on the peninsula, including the battles of Mechanicsville, Gaine's Mill, Charles City Cross Roads and Malvern Hill; in Pope's Virginia campaign in the summer of 1862; in the battle of Gettysburg, at Wapping Heights, Bristoe Station and in the Mine Run campaign. Was honorably discharged with his regiment at Pittsburg, Pa., on the 11th day of May, 1864, being one of the 13 original members of his company then mustered out.

In the Grand Army of the Republic he has held various positions of honor and responsibility, and is now a member of the John A. Rawlins Post No. 136, and has been its commander. He is at present judge advocate of the department of Minnesota, and held the same position under ex-Governor Barto in 1890.

He has been a member of the national council of administration and was a delegate to the national encampment at Detroit in 1891, and a national aide on the staff of Commander-in-Chief John P Rea.

He is a member of the Loyal Legion and is at present junior vice commander of the Minnesota commandery.

Ended with a Campfire.

ST. PAUL, March 3.—The campfire given in honor of the delegates to the encampment of the department of Minnesota was held in the Peoples church, and was a fitting finale to the business of the encampment. The church was filled with the comrades, their wives and friends, and an interesting programme well repaid those attending.

The addresses of Commander Torrance, ex-Governor Alexander Ramsey, Colonel E. C. Mason, Commander-in-Chief Thomas A. Lawler and Mrs. Lodusky J. Taylor were in the nature of war reminiscences and stories.

Take Notice.

All who signed the famous "Taylor contracts" will find it to their advantage to meet with the committee at the city hall in Crookston on Saturday, March 9th, at 1 o'clock, as business of great importance to them will be under consideration. If you signed that contract it will be decidedly to your advantage to attend.

CONGRESS ADJOURNS

BOTH HOUSE HELD SUNDAY SESSIONS.

Much Business Was Transacted and Many Differences Smoothed Over—Hawaiian Cable Defeated, but the Monetary Conference Is Arranged.

WASHINGTON, March 4.—The adjournment of congress was without unusual incident, except that the clocks were not turned back, and both houses expired promptly at noon. There were the usual resolutions of thanks for courtesy of the speaker of the house and president of the senate. The usual joint committee waited upon the president to ask if he had any further communication to make to the congress and upon his assurance that he had none notified the respective bodies to that effect. Then the speaker and the president of the senate in a few fitting words thanked the members for good conduct, etc., and the Fifty-third congress passed into history.

Heaved a Sigh of Relief.

The last of the great appropriation bills was sent to the president shortly after 10 o'clock a. m. for his signature, and with their departure a great sigh of relief went up from the enrolling office. There were five bills on which the enrolling clerks were engaged all night, the deficiency, sundry civil, diplomatic, Indian and naval. The final agreements on all of these were reached during the night, and each one was turned over to Chairman Pearson of the committee on enrolled bills as soon as the amendments had been drafted by the proper officials. Besides the appropriation bills about 35 bills of minor importance had to be engrossed and enrolled.

TO CHANGE RULES.

Mr. Dubois Offered a Resolution Before Adjournment.

WASHINGTON, March 4.—Senator Dubois offered a resolution before congress adjourned amending the rules, so as to provide for the distribution of the appropriation bills, among the several committees of the senate, instead of confining them as now to the committee on appropriations, except the river and harbor bill which, at present, goes to the committee on commerce. He asked its present consideration, but Mr. Aldrich objected and Mr. Dubois gave notice that he would call up the resolution on the first Monday of the next congress. A resolution relative to the medal of honor, authorized by the act of July 12, 1862, and March 6, 1863, was then adopted.

Signed by the President.

WASHINGTON, March 4.—All the appropriation bills have become laws, the president having affixed his signature to the last of them to reach him—the naval and general deficiency appropriation bills.

IS A CABINET OFFICER.

William L. Wilson Named for Postmaster General.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 28.—Postmaster General Bissell has handed his resignation to the president, to take effect as soon as his successor is named. Mr. Bissell will return to New York and resume his law practice.

WASHINGTON, March 1.—The president has nominated William L. Wilson of West Virginia, to succeed Wilson S. Bissell as postmaster general.

MILLIONS INVOLVED.

Great Amount of Capital Affected by a Patent Decision.

WASHINGTON, March 4.—The case of the Bate Refrigerator company against Francis Sulzberger & Co., upon which the question of American patents expire when foreign patents have been previously issued, was decided in an exhaustive opinion by Justice Harlan. It is estimated that not less than $600,000,000 of capital hinges upon the decision which determines the status of many valuable patents.

The court held that the invention for which Bate received a patent was previously patented in a foreign country and that the United States patent did expire with the foreign patents. The decision is against electric and other patents involved in the decision of this suit.

INSALLATION SERVICES.

Last Wednesday Rev. Herman P. Fisher, recently of Ortonville, was installed as pastor of the Congregational church of this city. The services of the day began with a fellowship meeting in the morning. Dr. Merrill, who represented the First Congregational church, of Minneapolis, said of this meeting: "It was almost ideal in its arrangement." The delegates who had been invited from the surrounding towns, together with the citizens of this place, greatly enjoyed the short and practical discussions of this meeting. In the afternoon the council convened for the examination of the pastor-elect. Many had expressed a desire to attend an examination of this kind and were on hand at the appointed hour, not without some feeling of curiosity to see how the candidate would handle the many difficult questions that might be put. After the roll-call, which showed more than a quorum present, Mr. Fisher presented his credentials, read a short paper and for nearly two hours promptly answered all questions which were asked, much to the apparent satisfaction of those who listened. The examination was unanimously and heartily approved, and the services of installation were held in the evening. Rev. R. H. Battey, of Barnesville, read the minutes of the council; Rev. H. W. Fraser, of Moorhead, read the the scripture and invoked the blessing; Rev. Geo. R. Merrill, D. D., of Minneapolis, preached the sermon; Rev. John H. Morley offered the prayer of installation and gave charge to the people; Rev. Isaac Terhorgh, of Ada, extended Right Hand of Fellowship, and Rev. C. T. Ilsley, of the Baptist church, welcomed Mr. Fisher to the city.

Mr. Fisher was born in Westborough, Massachusetts, educated in the public schools of his native city, and at graduation was given the salutatorian's address. After four years in Amherst College, he took the regular three years course in Hartford Theological Seminary, and at the end of the course he was awarded a scholarship with the privilege of another year's study in any department he chose. He has had three years experience in the work in Minnesota, at Ortonville, and the Herald-Star, of that place says of him:

"Mr. Fisher has been in charge of the Congregational pulpit for three years, and has proved himself a zealous worker in behalf of the church and christianity. His departure will be a source of genuine regret to a great many people who have learned to respect and admire his steadfastness and earnestness of purpose. His daily walk has ever been in full conformity with his teachings, and wherever he may go he will take with him the best wishes and the kindest regards of the people of this city."

Amusements.

Katie Putnam is an actress whose qualities and work are outside the ordinary standards of dramatic criticism. She cannot be weighed by the scales or measured by the rule which could be applied to any other person in her profession. Her talent and her genius are of a stamp all her own. She has a certain indescribable quality of individuality, a power not classified in the standard rules of criticism, which makes her popular everywhere and pleasing always. Occupying a field of her own, she establishes an indefinable relationship with her audiences which is potent and enduring in the maintenance of her popularity. This season Miss Putnam presents a charming play entitled "The Old Lime Kiln," a mingling of comedy, melodrama and emotional work which captivates her audiences and is always greeted with a continuous manifestation of approval. She gives a splendid rendition of a heroine of love, fun and heroism. She is singing several songs, new and catchy, among which may be mentioned, "Little Alabama Coon," "Her Golden Hair was Hanging Down Her Back," "Miss Dunn" and "Johny Green." Miss Putnam carries an excellent supporting company which includes the popular comedian Gus Cohan. Mr. Cohan will sing "Swim out, O'Grady," a new laughing song and parodies on all the popular songs of the day. The following well known people are also members of Miss Putnam's company: George Klint, H. B. Berry, Lewis C. Hart, Thos. B. Findlay, Barton Williams, John M. Gillis, L. M. Edgar, Sadie Radcliffe, Anna Watson, Rosa Laigh and Ada Fremont. Miss Putnam appears at Grand Opera House, Wednesday, March 13.

DIAMOND POLISHING.

CUTTING AND PUTTING A LUSTER ON THE FIERY STONE.

An Industry Not Known In This Country a Few Years Ago—Now Our Cutters Excel Those of Most Every European Country—"Rose" Diamonds Made of Chips.

Very few people who are fortunate enough to be able to wear diamonds know what amount of labor has been expended upon them from the time they were mined until finally they appear in the showcases of the jewelers ready for use. Fewer still are aware of the fact that the labor of the cutter and polisher adds at least $10 a carat to the value of the uncut diamond. These would squirm at the idea of taking even a seemingly finished and polished brilliant and splitting it into two pieces, doubling the expediency of the act on common sense grounds. The loss in weight from cutting is over one-half, but it so adds to the value of the diamond that a stone of one carat, costing in the rough perhaps $40, would sell for $110 when cut and polished, and the refuse or leavings from the cutting might bring a tidy sum besides. The value, however, does not depend alone upon the weight of the stone, but it is affected also by blemishes and impurity of color. It is the stone with a blemish, which is sometimes left in it in the hope that the ignorant and inexperienced purchaser may not discover it, which goes to the diamond cutter a second time, that the connoisseur thinks needs cutting and necessarily reducing to take the blemish out of, and thus increased its brilliancy and value.

Less than 15 years ago two diamond cutters cut and finished all the rough diamonds which came to this market. In fact, there was not a sufficiency of work even for these two workmen, for the brilliants were nearly all imported in a finished state, ready for setting in any shape for the wearers. But the duties upon these became an important matter, as there was nothing to pay upon the rough stone, at least nothing to speak of, and the finished article cost high because of the demands of Uncle Sam. He argued that people who could afford to wear diamonds should be willing to pay high for the privilege. This matter of duty paid to the customs officers became an incentive to the diamond cutting profession, and the number of workmen was increased and the inventive genius of our bright American inventors set at work to make labor saving machines for cutting and polishing diamonds.

Another fact that increased the incentive to encouraging American diamond cutters was that the work on the brilliants was too frequently done in a careless manner in Europe, particularly outside of the Dutch city of Amsterdam, and that American workmen could much better satisfy the critical taste of our people who deal in and wear precious stones, for the trade takes in all precious stones as well as diamonds. At that time the difference between a diamond imported and one cut and finished here was so marked that the demand for stones finished here was greatly increased, and within five years some six more diamond cutters had established themselves in New York, and all had more work than it was possible for them to do. The eight diamond cutters dressed and polished at least one-twentieth of all the diamonds sold in the city of New York, and the superior excellence of their work was recognized by all dealers and became the envy of the older workers in Holland, who had heretofore had almost a complete monopoly of the trade. This showed that some things as well as others might be done on this side of the water better than the workmen of Europe could do.

Diamonds are imported, as a rule, from South Africa, where as large and as fine stones are found as in all of the East Indies and Brazil, although many of the African diamonds are off color. They come to this country in the rough in all sorts of shapes and almost always uneven in shape. These lack entirely that luster which is the beauty of the brilliant and attaches to the name so closely, for it is the brilliancy and luster which make the diamond most valuable, added, of course, to the fact of its hardness and consequent ability to take and keep a very high polish. By the process of "cleaving" the irregularities of the rough stones are chipped off, and the general form of the diamond is secured, but without its possession of any of the circles which separate the faces. These chipped off pieces, if of suitable color and without flaws, are used for making what are denominated "rose" diamonds. What are called, in the parlance of the trade, "faces" of the diamond are cut by the rubbing together of two stones, and when this process is completed and the stones have been sufficiently rubbed down they resemble two irregular glass pebbles, but ground on the faces so that there is no sign nor any suggestion even of brilliancy. In fact, they are entirely without luster or beauty, and to the inexperienced eye worthless pieces of glass. But when the polishing of these dull looking stones is finished, and the process concluded, there is a vast difference in the appearance of the diamonds.—Philadelphia Times.

Electricity and Leather.

Electricity is now used for coloring leather more quickly and deeply. The hide is stretched on a metallic table and covered with the coloring liquid. A pressure of a few volts is then applied between the liquid and the table, which opens the pores of the skin and allows the color to sink in.—New York Ledger.

A marble statue, life size, cost during the reign of Commodus about $1,500; in the time of Charlemagne, nearly $3,000.
